The New-York Times.

VOL. XXI.....NO. 6339. NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, JANUARY 14, 1872. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

THE LOUISIANA MESS.

Efforts of Speaker Carter to Obtain His Rights.

The Militia and Police Being Used by Gov. Warmoth.

Continued Excitement Among the Citizens of New-Orleans.

Informal Carter Committee Make a Peaceable Demand.

The Governor Defines His Position and Issues Concessions.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 13.—This has been a day of intense excitement but no bloodshed. In consequence of the threatened action of Mr. CARTER, Gov. WARMOTH again massed his police force, several hundred in number, in and about the Mechanics' Institute, and from an early hour in the morning until late this afternoon a great crowd of citizens were assembled awaiting the denouement of the day. About 12 o'clock they commenced rushing from the corner of Royal and Canal streets, to the opposite side of the thoroughfare, and moving down the south side of the street and the neutral ground toward the State-house. All cheered vociferously, and at every step they were reinforced, by hundreds between Carondelet and Baronne streets. Before the mob reached the corner of Dryades it numbered upward of 2,000 men. Upon the arrival of Mr. CARTER and the members of the House who accompanied him at the corner of Canal and Dryades streets, a committee, consisting of B. B. LYNCH, J. C. MONCURE and BENJ. GADDES, was appointed to wait upon the Warmoth House and demand admission for the Speaker and his associates. Another committee consisting of H. H. STEVENS, J. HENRY BURCH and J. B. WARDS was appointed at the same time to wait upon Gov. WARMOTH and obtain from him a response to their demand for a reinstatement to their status as legitimate members of a co-ordinate branch of the State Government. Both Committees were to report the result of their several missions to their fellow-members at the Cosmopolitan Club-room. The first of these Committees, Messrs. LYNCH, MONCURE and GADDES, proceeded through the lines of Police into the hall as far as the door of the House of Representatives on the second floor of the building. When the door was opened they were told that "Mr. LYNCH having been expelled by the Warmothites, could not be admitted within the bar of the House. Mr. MONCURE, the Chairman, replied to Mr. BREWSTER, the Warmoth spokesman, that they came there, not as members of the House of Representatives, but as a committee to confer upon the differences existing, and presented the address of the Committee as follows:

Hon. Mr. Brewster, Chairman:

SIR: The late revolutionary proceedings of certain members of the Legislature having excluded the legally constituted Speaker and the House of Representatives from the hall wherein the senate has been accustomed to assemble, we, as a committee appointed by said House and in behalf thereof, are instructed in the interest of order and law to communicate through you, the recognized official head of said members, and respectfully demand of you and through you of the Governor of said State, if said body as the same existed at the hour of adjournment on Thursday, the 4th inst., and we await your answer to this legal and peaceable demand. Respectfully, B. B. LYNCH, J. C. MONCURE, BENJ. GADDES.

To this Mr. BREWSTER replied: "As such you cannot be admitted," whereupon the Committee retired. The second committee, consisting of Messrs. STEVENS, BURCH and WARDS, proceeded to the private room of Gov. WARMOTH, and handed to him the following communication:

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 13.

To His Excellency H. C. Warmoth:

SIR: That the citizens and their representatives of the legally-constituted House of Representatives may have free access to the hall of the House of Representatives, and be enabled to legislate freely, and without intimidation or molestation from armed men, we, as a committee of the House, do hereby, in behalf of all members of the Legislature, respectfully demand that the Police be removed from the building and its environs, we pledging ourselves to countenance no violence, nor any act that would make necessary the presence of the Police. Respectfully,

Signed—HARRY H. STEVENS, J. HENRY BURCH, JAMES B. WARDS, Committee.

The Governor then spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN: In reply I have to state at the request of at least fifty-seven members of the House of Representatives and seventeen members of the Senate, with Lieut.-Gov. PINCHBACK at their head, that I have only taken such measures as will protect the capital and members of the Assembly from violence and injury. The members of the Police and troops are only for the purpose of protection, and for protecting the members of the Legislature, and I have this morning sent Gen. HERGER to you to say that the members who have been expelled will be allowed to peacefully enter the House as citizens. I respectfully refuse to remove the troops and Police, as there might be a conflict at any moment, and some members and some of the people might get killed. I only keep them for the purpose of preserving the peace, and so decline to remove them.

Mr. WARD then propounded this interrogatory to the Governor:

"Will Col. CARTER be allowed to take his seat as a Speaker and member?"

The GOVERNOR—That is the question which only the Legislature can decide.

Mr. BURCH—How will you admit Carter?

Gov. WARMOTH—He will be admitted as member, so far as I am concerned; that, of course, is the business of the Legislature.

Mr. BURCH—Will you state the status of the members expelled?

Gov. WARMOTH—I leave that to the House.

Mr. STEVENS—I understand from you you will not remove the Police or allow the expelled member to return?

Gov. WARMOTH—The Police is only for the preservation of order.

The Committee then retired. After both Committees had made their reports to their fellow-members, Mr. MONCURE advanced to the balcony of the Cosmopolitan Club-room and said:

"The Speaker of the House of Representatives has been refused admission, and the Governor has refused to remove the Police. We have adjourned until Monday, at 10 A. M."

Mr. CARTER then came forward and said: "We do not propose to commence this fight until every legal remedy is exhausted. I am as much a part of the State and Government as HENRY CLAY, WARMOTH and I have as much legal right to defend the Government as WARMOTH would have to defend his office. I have the right to defend the General Assembly. It would be legal for me to swear in a house of Sergeants-at-Arms, and go and take possession of the hall of Representatives. Were I to do this, Mr. WARMOTH would put us to the light of fisticuffs. I don't intend to precipitate a riot. We must not under the law. It would not be doing my duty to the women and children of this town to make a row, and Orleans so crazed of the mind that who at present possesses the State Government. I will see Gen. HERGER. I will lay the matter before him, and if he approves I will [illegible]

[illegible] Gov. WARMOTH [illegible] Police [illegible] Institute [illegible] Gov. WARMOTH [illegible] Police [illegible] Gov. WARMOTH [illegible] Gov. WARMOTH [illegible] Gov. WARMOTH

CURRENT LITERATURE.

THERE WAS A ROSE.

"There was a Rose," she said,
"Like other roses, perhaps, to you.
Nine years ago it was faint and red
Away in the cold, dark dew,
On the dwarf bush where it grew.

Never any rose before
Was half that rose; very well I know;
Never another rose any more
Will blow as that rose did blow
When the wet wind shook it so.

'What do I want?'—Ah, what!
What I want that I may not see yet—
Our lost love! And that I may meet
Anywhere just now? God knows
Where all the old sweetness goes.

I want that rose so much:
I would turn into world back there to the West
Where I say it blush in the grass, to touch
Its cheek in the still night,
And only meet ME sight.

But a million marching men
From the North and the South would arise!
And the dead—would have to die again!
And the mother's widowed wife
Would tremble and sigh for life!

No matter. I would not care
Were it not better that this should be!
The sorrow of many the many bear,—
Miss to the heavy dew-soaked
And I want that rose, you see!"
—Mrs. S. M. B. PIATT, in the Atlantic Monthly.

THREE ACTS IN THE LIFE OF A DANSEUSE.

ACT I.

It was noon on a sultry July day, not a breath of air was stirring, and the broad sun blazed down in the fulness of his strength. The east winds had had it all their own way for a long time, and nipped with their bitter breath the golden heart of June; but they had gone to disport themselves in other spheres.

In a narrow by-street, close under the shadow of the glorious old Abbey of Westminster, a bright-eyed Italian boy extracted spirit-music from a pleasant-toned organ, that was really harmoniously inclined, creating a busy bustle in the silent by-way, and rousing the young children from their drowsy sleep. They crept out from their dingy dens, and swarmed upon the pavement, while their little feet began to pitter-patter on the stones, keeping time to the music. One moved with the awkwardness of a youthful hippopotamus, another with a strange, uncultivated grace; but there was one among them who formed the centre of attraction, even to that indiscriminating throng. One by one they left off dancing, and grouped themselves round her, watching her movements with admiring curiosity.

The little creature, the heroine of the hour, was a small fairy-like child of about six years old, with a sweet, fair face, and an abundance of bright golden hair, flowing in unrestrained wavy masses down her shoulders. Though her clothes were of coarse materials, they were fashioned with a degree of taste and elegance rarely to be found among the washing-poor, whose stern necessities destroy all idea of adornment of life. At the first glance, it was evident that a refined mind and loving hands had tended on the little dancer, so great was the difference between her and the gutter-children who swarmed around her. One by one the passers-by halted, and fancying the entertainment was got up for their special benefit, expressed their approval aloud, and threw a few copper coins at the twinkling feet of the child, who, however, never heeding them, danced on, having no eyes for anything but her own shadow, which the full midday sun cast upon the pavement at her feet. In the foremost rank of her admirers was a thick-set boy, of about twelve years old, with bright, intelligent eyes, a flat face, crowned with a heavy thatch of brown, curly hair. He was one of the Shoe-black Brigade. Having deposited his stock-in-trade upon the curb-stone, he sat upon it, like a monarch on his throne. One moment he leaned his cheek upon his hand, and followed the child's movements with critical eyes, when stirred to unusual admiration, he opened his wide mouth, rolled his head upon his shoulders, clapped his hands, and kicked up his heels till he tumbled over in his ecstasy of delight. In the midst of his excitement, however, he had a shrewd eye to business, he gathered up the coins, which the child trod under foot. By degrees the animation faded from her face; her limbs grew weary; and at last she sank down at the boy's side, and laid her head upon his shoulder, saying breathlessly—

"I'm tired, Bob."

"Never mind, Gerty. You danced beautiful, and I'll carry yer home."

"Who was it danced with me?" whispered the child.

"Who was wot? I didn't see nobody."

"Oh, but you must have seen," rejoined Gerty, pettishly. "It was always there, and I couldn't catch it, however I tried to."

"Why, that was your shadder," said the boy, with a broad grin.

"Was it?" she answered, in a tone of mysterious surmise. "I didn't know I'd got one."

"Everybody has," the lad replied, with an air of profound knowledge. "It is always along of us, but we don't always see it."

"No," rejoined Gerty, as a thoughtful expression crept into her small face; "but what is it, Bob?"

"Well," he said, delighted to be an authority, and making a sweeping assertion, "that's what nobody knows exactly. The sun makes it."

"Oh! does it come all the way from there?" exclaimed the child, glancing upward.

At this moment a poor, faded-looking woman, young in years, but, judging from her face, old in the world's bitter experience, passed by, and paused to see the dance. She lifted the child in her arms, and glanced reproachfully upon the boy as she said:

"I trusted her to you, Robert Bryce, and see what you've done—made a show and a shame of the child!"

"There won't no shame in it," answered the boy, sturdily; "and see what she've got."

He held out the handful of half-pence he had gathered up. The woman frowned.

"For money, money, too!" she muttered, as she flung the coins into the road, amid the shouts and laughter of the urchins, who tumbled over each other in their greedy scramble for them, while the woman and child went up the street, followed by the crestfallen Bob, who knew he was in disgrace, though he felt he didn't deserve it. Little Gerty looked sorry and ashamed, as though her conduct had brought trouble on the head of a devoted friend. The woman addressed no word of reproach to the child, but threaded her way rapidly through the busy streets till she reached her own door; then she glanced over her shoulder at the boy, and said:

"I'm not angry, Bob; you can come again to-morrow; only when I trust you with Gerty, you must look after her, and not let her dance, especially to a street organ."

"It wasn's his fault, mother—I would," replied Gerty; and she shook her golden curls, and smiled "Good-bye" to him.

Mrs. Welch ascended the well-worn stairs to her garret-home—a room with white-washed walls and a sloping roof. Scrupulously clean and neat it was. The same neatness was evident there as in the child's dress; everything unsightly was hidden away or covered up with draperies of pink and white calico. A basket of rose-smelling flowers was on the table; and the window-sill was filled with bright-colored geraniums, which she had nursed through many bitter Winters, that they might bring back a scene of Summer to her eye though it was shut out from her heart. The room was crowded with a brilliant array of rank and fashion, in the shape of wax dolls, of all ages and positions, from the flower-girl up to the Grand Duchess, all dressed in the highest fanciful fashion. Little Gertrude passed her life in this world of waxen beauty, and used to make wonderful "make-believe" stories to her mute companions. She danced to them, talked to them, and took them generally into her confidence for friends or playfellows she had none, except, indeed, the boy "Bob," who was both fatherless and motherless. He had earned himself in the Shoe-black Brigade, of which he was regarded as a promising member. He was strictly honest, industrious, and truthful, which rare virtues, perhaps, took their root and were trained and cultivated in Mrs. Welch's garret-home, where he usually spent his "hours of ease." He was Gerty's guardian and school-master, a post of honor which he highly appreciated.

The mother worked very hard—stitch, stitch, stitching from morning till night. The child was drooping for want of air and exercise. Bob saw it, and earned her into the park, and let her frisk about every day for an hour or two. Two small sacrifices he had by the transaction, one made up by the sight of Gerty's bright face. She looked forward to Bob's coming as the great event in her daily life. He took loving care of the child, and had only once failed in his duty when he allowed her to dance to the street-organ. As street-organs were forbidden, he invited the Italian in a confidential conference, in a shy, sheepish fashion, he pulled it out of the corner, and produced a condition by the musical abbitator. Gerty danced right joyfully to the tunes he played; and so, night after night, the two young actors played their parts before the most critical audience of staring blue eyes, and warm, fresh, Time passed, and Gerty had a happier period of their river impossibilities, cheaper and shirtier than the reality, stood away.

Behind her dance a young man of twenty-one, and he grand conduct had attracted no step by step, till he occupied a place of trust in the city. Bright, that had fluttered his boyhood, brought changes in many ways. He was still Gerty's guardian spirit, she had grown up into a beautiful creature, and innocence of childhood, which the world, as a rule, takes in early opportunity of rubbing off, but, what with her mother's tender love, and Robert's watchful care, the world had no chance to spoiling Gerty. Her passion for dancing was by no means diminished, although since the sad outcoming childhood, both her mother and Bob had done all in their power to extinguish it. Still it was there, smoldering, and gaining strength—indeed, growing all the stronger because it was so stealthy.

One dull November evening, when they had been working from the morning until the night, Gertrude finished the last stitch, and let her hands fall listlessly in her lap, and leaning back in her chair, exclaimed:

"Oh! what a dreary world it is!" Then looking thoughtfully in her mother's face, she added, "Have you been all your life dressing dolls, mother?" A flush suffused the woman's pale cheeks, as she answered:

"No. Why do you ask?"

"Because I wonder you haven't died of it."

"I've learnt patience—people don't die of work."

"We can scarce live by it," said Gertrude, folding her hands and looking thoughtfully up. "Is there no other way of getting our bread? Must we live always so from one year to another, dressing dolls? Will there never be a change? Never an end?"

"I pray there will never be an end to our living honestly, Gerty; and you may live to pray so too."

Gerty pouted, and said she thought there might be many other ways of getting bread and much more agreeable, adding: "You remember last Christmas, mother? Surely you can't have forgotten what the gentleman said? I've thought of it often." Her simple words seemed heavily accountable for the excitement of her companion.

"Hush! Gerty, hush!" An expression of positive pain contracted her face. "Don't think of him; don't speak of him! He was a fiend, come to tempt us in our poverty—tempt me with a life, Gerty, I know the world—the world he exists in, in such a pleasant way. But don't think of it any more; it sounded well enough, but it meant nothing. I thought you had forgotten it."

Gertrude was silenced, but by no means convinced; she was accustomed to her mother's mode of expression and mysterious phrases; she knew it was no use to ask questions, for she never got an answer. At least such an answer as satisfied her. She smiled loftily to herself when the mother called the magnificent being with the dark brown beard and proud dark eyes "a fiend," and wondered if she should ever grow so old as to be blind to such marvelous charms.

"I wish I could see you more quiet and contented, Gerty," resumed her mother; "somehow you've changed lately, and Robert says——"

"What does Robert say?" exclaimed the girl, flaming up and getting angry at the mention of his name at that special moment; "and what right has he to say anything about me at all? He has grown so disagreeable and interfering lately. I shall begin to hate him soon!"

"Poor Bob!" sighed Mrs. Welch; "his only fault is caring too much for you, Gerty."

"I don't want him to care for me," said Gertrude, arching her slender neck scornfully. "I'd much rather he'd leave off caring since it makes him so disagreeable—I wish he'd leave off coming here; and I shall tell him so."

"Take care what you do, Gerty; take care," rejoined her mother, anxiously. "You may live to learn the value of an honest friend and a true heart, though you despise them now."

"I don't despise them," protested Gertrude, hurt at her mother's grieved tone; "but you don't understand me—you never will. You both—you and Robert—treat me like a child, and I'm not a child now. I want to know if we are to sit here stitching dolls' dresses all our lives? I hate the things!" and she pushed a beautiful princess, covered with gold and silver spangles, across the table with profound disgust.

"No, not forever; you know as soon as Robert has got a comfortable home you'll be married."

"I marry Bob," exclaimed Gerty, opening her eyes and laughing outright, though tears of vexation were glistening in her eyes. "Dear, good, ugly old Bob! Oh, mother, I hope he doesn't think of such a thing."

That evening Robert failed to make his appearance, and Gerty had to take home their work alone. She had a long way to go, and it was a dull cold night; but the keen wind seemed to brace her young nerves and quicken her pulse, instead of chilling and nipping them as a north wind ought to do. Her thoughts were buzzing so busily about her brain that she forgot to control her feet, she took a wrong turning somewhere and was too shy to ask her way; so she rambled on till she found herself in Leicester-square. The Alhambra was brilliantly illuminated, and the transparencies of the troupe of dancers was exhibited over the wide arched doorway. The spell of the old days was awakened; her feet trembled, and her spirit danced within her—she was fascinated and seized with an irresistible desire to enter and see the wonders of that marvelous place. She pressed near the entrance, and watched with eager eyes the world flow in and out, while the sound of music was wafted to her ears. A dawn of recognition came into one gentleman's face as he passed and re-passed her. He touched her shoulder to attract her attention, lifted his hat, smiled, and said:

"Gertrude Welch, I think?"

The girl's cheek flushed crimson, her eyes brightened, and her lips quivered with a feeling of strange delight. At the first shy upward glance in his face, nay, at the very sound of his voice, she knew who it was, and as she acknowledged she was indeed Gertrude Welch, a guilty feeling stole over her. She felt ashamed, and began to see she had done wrong in loitering there.

"Would you like to go in and see the dancing?" he said, kindly.

"Oh! if I might. If I only could go in!" she exclaimed, the excitement almost taking away her breath; and she glanced beseechingly up in his face as though she were pleading for the greatest favor in the world.

"Come along, then," he said, quietly offering her his arm; but she shrank back, and followed behind him. He took her to a seat close to the stage, and mounted guard over her, watching the varying expression of her face. It was a study to a man of the world, who had been blase before he was out of his teens. He could scarcely believe in the freshness of this human nature. The bloom lay fresh on the girl's life still, though she had lived for sixteen years.

Gertrude sat there in a maze of wonder. She had caught a glimpse of a new world indeed. The brilliant lights, the music, the mass of strange faces impressed her strangely—then the stage, with its beautifully-arranged ballet, "a very garden of girls" floating about in a perfumed fairyland of flowers. Her feet tingled and trembled—her very soul danced within her—her excitement rose beyond control—she bent down her head and burst into tears.

"The dancing fever is still strong upon you, Gertrude; would you like to be one of them?" such an idea was beyond her wildest ambition. The music ceased, the curtain rose behind the dancers, and revealed her a vision of fairy for a moment; then voices rose and sank at her with critical curiosity. Such a figure, such a face, such a transition across their view. At last the manager said:

"So you want to be a dancer, my dear, do you; let me see what you can do." Gertrude was dumb, and her feet seemed rooted to the ground. His business-like words chilled her enthusiastic spirit. She lifted her eyes to Mr. Bond's face. He smiled encouragingly and said:

"Don't be shy, Gertrude. Go on."

The sound of the music playing now a rather slow and solemn air reached her ears. She threw her bonnet and shawl to the ground, took a few steps forward, and, with a slow, graceful movement, began to dance. But dancing, according to the common acceptation, was not the correct word to describe her movements. Weak, he, dancing was more, far more, was impossible. She gave to every the poetry of motion. She gave a slow, languid grace to every changing movement, a refinement to every attitude, that spoke to the soul with a strange power. As an act of sadness seemed to pervade her spirit and cling to every motion, veiling her all under with melancholy grace and charm.

Gertrude was engaged some time after to take part in a ballet, which was in active preparation for Christmas Eve.

As Mr. Bond (whom Mrs. Welch had proclaimed to stigmatize as a "fiend") escorted Gertrude through the pitfalls and dangers that yawn for unwary feet behind the scenes he passed a moment while some stage arrangement was being made. He gazed upon her face with an intensity that made her cheeks burn and her eyes drop, as he said:

"You have never been in such a place as this before?"

"No; never," she answered. "I could not have thought there was such a beautiful place in all the world."

"Are you coming to-morrow, at 11, to practice?"

"I shall see you then. I must see you again, Gertrude," he added, bending his head down and speaking in a low passionate whisper. "See you here, if in no other place; I am quite at home behind the scenes."

How, was it that at that moment the thought of home—of her mother, of Robert—rose up in her mind. What would they think of that night's work? How late it must be getting! She put out her hand to him, saying—

"Good-night! I must go home, now. She would have hurried away, but he did not release her hand.

"Not so fast," he said; "your home is a long way off. I'll put you in the right road."

It was indeed late when Gertrude reached Westminster. As she passed under the shadow of the old Abbey, the clock struck twelve. With childlike faith and simplicity she told her mother all that had taken place during her absence, all, down to her last "Good-night" to him.

Mrs. Welch stood upon her feet and paced to and fro in her chair, she listened with face bowed down. When Gertrude finished, she looked up intently upon the girl's hands in hers, and drew her to her side, saying:

"If I could, have my will, Gerty, I would rather cut off your two feet, than they should tread the stage even for an hour. I know what it is—I—I danced myself to misery and shame, but you——" she caught herself up suddenly, drops the girl's hands, adding, half mutteringly, "Go your ways, there's a fate in it—a fate in it." Her thoughts went wandering back behind the scenes of her own life, though the curtain had fallen over it long—long ago.

ACT II.

Christmas Eve came. Never had such a day dawned and closed on Gertrude's life before; even in her maiden dreams, she had never imagined such perfect bliss as came in full, strong waves to her lips that day. She had what is called in theatrical language, "a brilliant success."

The curtain rose, the ballet-master's well-trained troupe of dancers grouped themselves in set, stagey attitudes, popularly supposed to be graceful; but grace cannot be drilled into the limbs by the professional baton. There is always a rigidity about the artist's lay figures, let him twist and twirl and drape them as he will; it is the same with the animated lay figures that issue from the ballet-master's hand. They may be trained to pose themselves with greatly effect, to languish, dart, float and pirouette with spurious grace; but the true poetry of motion is inborn, arising from genius of soul and refinement of mind. Such a genius was Gertrude. She could no more help the exquisite grace that thrills through each charm of her movements, than the rose can help shedding its perfume in the air. When she moved, with her languid airy grace, suggestive of a story though telling none, all eyes followed her with a fascinated gaze, in vain the other dancers grouped themselves round her with all the art and voluptuous grace they knew; she was the centre of attraction, the one pure chaste figure which drew all eyes. The audience, watched her for a time with breathless attention, then a thunder of applause burst from their lips; again and again she was recalled and covered with bouquets. Mr. Bond was behind the scenes, standing at the wings watching his protege with delighted eyes. Robert was before the curtain gazing on her too, with a variety of feelings which would fill a volume if reduced to words. He was armed with a huge bouquet, (it was not artistic enough to be called a bouquet,) he large in dimensions and a Sunflower in the place, and he flung it at the feet of his idol, as though he were heaving a blacking-brush at the head of a brother shoe-black in the old days. She rewarded him with a special smile, which drew his heart up into his mouth.

"It is all over," muttered the poor fellow to himself, as he gulped back a sigh. He was not alluding to her, but to his own life—parted now from hers it seemed utterly. Her twinkling feet would return never more to the narrow ways they had trod so long together. In the furor, the storm of admiration she created, he heard the knell to all his life-long love; he saw foreshadowing of her fate, or rather he felt it.

When the curtain fell, and the performance was over, Bob hurried round to the stage-door to wait till his idol should doff her gorgeous glittering robes and come out, as it was arranged, for him to escort her home.

Presently he heard her voice, there was no mistaking that, and he looked in at the open door. Gertrude was coming down the stairs leaning on the arm of a stranger, with a pleased, happy look upon her face as she spoke in answer to something he had said:

"Thank you; but, indeed, I have some one waiting for me."

"Some one," he repeated, laying peculiar accent on the word, bending his head low, and looking in her face. Though it was dark, and Bob could not see, he knew well enough what a look it was. "Are you good at reading riddles, Miss Welch?" he added. Gertrude stazed at the sad a propos question.

"I don't know; I never tried."

"Why is it," he rejoined, "that the idea of this somebody fills me with envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness? Who is this somebody?"

"Only Bob."

"Happy Bob. I never thought I could envy the owner of such a name—but I do."

"He's a very old friend," rejoined Gertrude, hardly knowing what to say. "And I've known him all my life."

This pleasant fact ought to make him accord to me. But it doesn't—I should like to wring his neck all the same."

"I wonder what he is?" exclaimed Gertrude, peering out into the street. Robert stepped forward, saying, in the most familiar tone he could assume:

"Here I am, Gerty." He touched his hat to the gentleman, and would have tucked her hand under his arm, and walked off without more ado; but her right hand was fast in her companion's clasp, so he softly said, "Good night." Before he loosed it he turned his eyes on Bob, and scrutinized him with a look that made his blood boil. Bob's face flamed, and his hand clenched involuntarily; he felt the strongest possible inclination to send this man sprawling in the gutter. Having apparently satisfied his curiosity, the stranger dropped his eyes, and, addressing Gertrude, said, with a touch of scorn in his tone:

"I don't think, Mr. Bob."

"Robert Bryce is my name," interrupted Bob, with a straightforward look in the gentleman's eyes, showing, as plain as looks can, that he did; and choose strangers to take liberties with his name.

"Mr. Robert Bryce, then," he resumed, "I did not trouble to [illegible] another time, I'm sure trouble." [illegible] "and so good-night." [illegible] Gertrude, [illegible] Bob, [illegible] Gertrude, with a slightly reproachful glance at her cavalier. "Do you know what [illegible]"

"No," growled Bob.

"I thought you didn't, or you'd have been more civil. If was Mr. Bond, who has been so kind to me." Robert muttered an imprecation on his kindness, and they walked on in silence. Gertrude felt a they notion that something was wrong, but she was too much occupied with her own subject to inquire what her companion was about. She was in fullness and pride of her heart she babbled out all she thought, all she felt.

Gertrude's debut having been so successful, she received sevenscore the offer of an engagement for the ensuing [illegible] at a guinea per week, which seemed to her to open up a mine of wealth untold. The humble gazer, who was soon vacated for perfect appartment. The faded look passed from Mrs. Welch's face; she grew young up as a flower, that has been kept in the dark, drooping up when first the day and sunlight finds it. Gertrude's mother, now the [illegible] shook was over, was almost as pleased as Gertrude, said her old misgivings seemed to have left her. In Gertrude's success she seemed to live her own life over again, at least the brightest part of it. Never was a young girl surrounded with more wonderful influences.

Whenever Mrs. Welch was unable to accompany her to the theatre, Robert considered himself on duty, and escorted the young danseuse to the stage-door, and mounted guard—sentinel-like—till she was ready to go home. Once he went behind the scenes and stood at the wings waiting, but nothing would induce him to take up that position again. Gerty became the fashion, the spoilt pet of the public; but the praise and adulation she received never affected the sweetness of her nature or made her see with the less gratefulness her home affections. She was still the spoilt pet of the friends, where she spent the greater part of her leisure hours chatting with her mother or crooning or laughing at Bob.

ACT III.

It was just twelve months since Gertrude had made her successful a debut. The year had opened brilliantly like the dawn of a gay day; the end was coming, and the winter robe of the old year was heavy with storm-clouds, and was girded around with frost and snow. The bitter winds went sweeping and howling through the London streets, sighing some half-dead shivering creatures to the home.

Robert Bryce was up and out early on that keen Christmas Eve; his brow was stormy, his hat pulled over his eyes, and his wrapper buttoned across his broad breast. He looked as though he were bent on some grave errand, and faced the cutting wind bravely. He was stout of heart and stout of limb; he could wrap himself round and shield himself from all outer attacks of wind and weather, but he could find no shield to protect his spirit from its own pain, no medicine to ease it of a single throb. Strong he was in youth, health, manhood, and sinew; but with all his strength he had no power to lift a feather's weight from the life of the girl he loved, and she strong man fretted and chafed sorely against his helplessness. He could not protect him from herself, from she impulsive, generous, but her own fond foolish heart. In spite of all his warnings and his earnest entreaties, she kept on her dangerous ways. Mr. Bond was now acknowledgedly her constant companion behind the scenes, yes, and elsewhere. Robert knew it, it was no use to talk to her further, she laughed at his evil boding, ridiculed his anxieties, and teased with his fears; sometimes she grew vexed, and once never spoke to him for a whole week! He could not bear to part and anyone, when he knew it was to no purpose, so he resolved in spite of her willful will, to see Mr. Bond, and put things in their "right light," as he called it, upon which errand he was sent that dreary Christmas Eve morning.

Mr. Bond was sitting in his chambers at breakfast when the bell rang; he rose up, opened the door, and admitted Robert Bryce.

"Sorry to intrude upon you, Sir," he exclaimed, "as I'm afraid I'm not particularly welcome." Mr. Bond motioned him to sit, and he did sit down, keeping his hat upon his knees, and looking altogether the reverse of comfortable.

"Well," replied Mr. Bond, stirring his coffee, "I must own I have received visitors I've been better pleased to see, and I dare say we shall come to a pleasant understanding before we part."

"I don't expect there'll be much pleasure between us two," said Bob, grimly, "I'm not much of a hand at talking, Sir, and you'll excuse me if I come to the point a little roughly;—what I want to know is your intentions as regards Gertrude—I don't think I can put it plainer than that."

"You're more curious than wise. I never answer impertinent questions"—replied Mr. Bond, quietly breaking an egg.

"You'll have to answer mine anyhow," rejoined Bob, as a look of stern dogged determination came into his face, "or give me a satisfactory reason for holding your tongue."

"I could give myself a very satisfactory reason for kicking you down stairs," exclaimed Mr. Bond, irritated by his tone and manner.

"Better not," replied Bob, quietly, "it might be a bad thing for some of us; I told you before I wasn't good at talking, but I won't have any man play the fool with Gertrude Welch—that's what I mean to say."

"A great deal compressed in very few words," replied Mr. Bond, dryly; "but doesn't it strike you that this interference of yours between me and Miss Welch looks very like playing the fool on your side?"

"Perhaps it do," said Bob, struck with the idea; "but never mind what it looks like—I know what I do."

"You are no friend of mine," said Mr. Bond; "no relation of hers; therefore you have no right whatever to interfere between us. Gertrude is nothing to you——"

"She is everything to me," exclaimed Bob, hotly.

"Oh! I beg your pardon," said Mr. Bond, a significant, cynical smile curving his lips. Bob sprang up, took a step forward, his hand involuntarily clenched, as he said with that forced calmness which is more terrible than anger—

"Now, don't—don't dare to think of her and me with that devil's grin upon your face, or mischief may come of it. Look here," he added, mastering his inner wrath the next moment, "it ain't creditable to have a quarrel in a case like this—I come here to speak in a straightforward way, hoping as you'd answer me the same as a gentleman that means all fair and honorable should."

"My honor has never yet been called in question by any woman or child," said Mr. Bond, his color rising slowly as he spoke.

"Then don't let it be questioned now, Sir—for it is in danger," rejoined Robert; "you can't say as it's dishonorable to destroy a girl's good name, and ruined and that's the work you're doing for Gertrude Welch—don't speak, please, Sir, till I've done—you are always together, I know; it may be very pretty amusement to you, as have no character to lose, nor no hearts to break—it's different with her. Now, Sir, no offence, but your just the sort of a man with your soft-voiced, pleasant ways, to dazzle a girl like Gerty. You can't help being fond of you. But you can help taking advantage of her simple, trusting heart."

"Mr. Bryce, I swear——"

"No call for swearing," exclaimed Bob; "I'd want her sister's word from you—what I want is your's. I'm a rough man, Sir, but I'm a man to trust her as a sister to trust—and should be content to be a friend, honorable man I am you would have your own sister treated by the man who had caught her heart to love him? Do you mean to marry Gertrude Welch?"

Mr. Bond smiled, not a cynical smile this time; he glanced round his luxuriously-furnished room and said, "Marriage is a very serious question, Mr. Bryce, you must not judge from appearances—I am not a rich man, but a very poor one—I can scarcely keep the wolf from the door, and even if I desired it I could not afford to marry Gertrude." Bob's heart rose up in his throat, but his face brightened as he said:

"Look here, Sir, we're all plain sailing now, so I don't mind speaking out about Gerty. Here's how's his Sir, she and me was pretty comfortable good friends, till you came on the scene; no offence, but I see her heart turned away from me, it was natural—she couldn't help it. It was time, I think, for me to speak out—I asked her to be my wife, and she refused me point blank. I'm not a man to take a hint of that sort, I'm too much in earnest—I asked her reason, and she said I was too good for her, and I ought to have a better wife than she could be to me. I'm not good at talking, Sir, but I'm good at loving, and I'm good at working, and I'm good at waiting, and I'm good at bearing, and I'm good at forgiving, and I'm good at forgetting, if I can't do that I can't do anything, and I'm good at loving her still, though she's turned my heart to lead in my breast, and I'm good at wishing her happiness with the man she's chosen, though it's breaking my heart to see her throw herself away upon him, and I'm good at hoping she may never rue the day she gave herself to a man who could not give her a single thought, when he married her, that he could not make her happy—no, not for a single hour; and I'm good at believing she will, if she marries a man who will make her happy—and, and you needn't be afraid, Sir, as I'll ever disgrace either of you by owning we'd ever been acquainted. I'll be happy—no, not that, the poor fellow added. "But I'll be content never to see her pretty face again so long as I know you're good to her." Mr. Bond looked at Robert, and there was an expression on his face that was rarely seen there; he was gaining a glimpse into the heart of a human creature which was new to him; he could not quite comprehend it.

"I thought you loved the girl yourself?" he said.

"So I do," replied Bob. "I love her more than all the world could measure—that's why I'm so anxious you should have her; you're a man her heart's not in, I should be happy—no, not that, the poor fellow added, "but I'll be content never to see her pretty face again so long as I know you're good to her." Mr. Bond looked at Robert, and there was an expression on his face that was rarely seen there; he was gaining a glimpse into the heart of a human creature which was new to him; he could not quite comprehend it.

"I thought you loved the girl yourself?" he said.

"So I do," replied Bob. "I love her more than all the world could measure—that's why I'm so anxious you should have her; you're a man her heart's not in.

Sierra. Mr. Rev. Bronnt Harte, the good wife first called me the Railway Kings and I remember very well that he made a very lovely speech about it, saying "that while some merchs had won their title to fame by bloodshed and by the misery they inflicted on their fellow-creatures, I had come to my throne by my own peaceful exertions and by a course of probity and enterprise." This was always Hensonby's tone. He had been made a victim. There was great fiction and a great public outcry, and he was the scapegoat; but where were the enthusiasm and enterprise he had favored most? Successful, nearly every one.

THE PEOPLE'S DICTION OF THE FUTURE.

Every improvement in this world brings changes with it which are not all good. We cannot rain a great benefit without the spread of minor drawbacks; and some such drawbacks may be discerned as a consequence of the present effort to provide universal education. It is a very good thing that everybody should be able to read and write fluently, and we have no right to grudge to others accomplishments without which we should not feel ourselves to be in the full possession of our senses. Now are we at present concerned with the apprehension that all people may not make the best use of the gift now pressed upon them. As members of a civilized community they are entitled to claim it as a birthright. Our fears are of a less solemn cast. We are thinking of the change which will inevitably be produced by the influence of book-learning on the vernacular of the laboring classes. Hitherto, though the children go to school, their learning, in country places, at any rate, scarcely intrudes itself on their home life. They learn and they forget, and express themselves very much as though they had never opened a book. But the teaching of the future is to be more thorough, and is to leave its mark. Children are not only to learn to read, but to read as a consequence of having learnt. With this acquisition of power must inevitably spring up an ambitious to improve upon the old modes of speech; and the obvious method of doing this will be to adopt the language of books, the books that please an uncultivated taste, in familiar talk. The intercourse of different classes has hitherto been carried on in what may be regarded as different tongues; and where one side has to force its meaning into a narrow and rude vocabulary, the difference is very marked and very shocking to sensitive people. The present plan of education is to force as few intellectual fruit strike a death-blow at the current speech of multitudes. The child will be taught to talk differently from his parents, and will probably be ashamed of broad provincialisms, which, because of their rough force, will stick to his memory like burrs. The world will be a gainer, no doubt, but something will be lost of homely force and humor.

It is not supercilious patronage that makes us value the artless language of the poor; we should, in fact, all be losers if the uneducated classes gave up the habit of striving to express what they mean in their own way. We thus realize what they tell us, the impressions they wish to convey, the views of life which influence them, more vividly than if they aspired to greater grammatical correctness. There is something of the fresh, sweet smell and graphiveness of a language not only in provincial dialects, but in unfamiliar idioms. Rich and poor cannot converse together without ideas being imparted on either side when to neither is the vehicle of communication stale or hackneyed. So long as there are ranks and degrees, language and manner will show them. There can be no doubt that a corrected phraseology is a step toward social equality; but before all people speak a common tongue at once easy and correct, we shall have a wide-spread use of second-hand language borrowed from books and newspapers, which is of all modes of speech the most frigid and repellant. Science books and school training by themselves, when taken as guides encourage a formality of expression which only keeps people apart more effectually than mere class distinctions. When each speaks in the idiom of his social life, inequalities may be forgotten; but when a man uses only book words, a sense of estrangement is inevitable in the hearer. How irksome is social intercourse with a man or woman who discards the colloquial word for the provincial newspaper substitute—a practice which at present is confined to the people who make a great display of looking down on ignorance and low life, and who are always proving their superiority over the vulgar by using words which they have picked up without being able to assimilate them. Who can enjoy a chat with a man who always talks of women as females, and of a man as an individual, with whom things are never like but similar, who never begins a thing, but always commences it, who never sees a stone but descries it; who does not help, but facilitate; who does not supply, but furnish; who never buy, but always purchase; who calls a beggar a mendicant, with whom a servant is always a domestic, when he is not a menial, who does not say a thing, but states it, and does not end, but terminates it; who calls a house a residence, in which no does not live, but resides, with whom a place is locality, and things do not happen, but transpire, with whom a murder is always a tragedy, and shocking things are terrible or related. It will be a day of bad omen for the harmonizing of class interests and feelings when this affectation of a choice diction descends from the middle class to artisans and laborers. And yet it seems in the nature of things that this must happen; and hence the rudeness, roughness and unintelligibleness of the rustic dialect, which still linger in our ears, acquire a new charm, because they are invested with the aspect of things which are passing away and are not to be recalled.

At present the people have a certain jealousy of long words as promising more than they can fulfill, which is shown in such expressions as the clown Costard in "Rambler's Lane": O, that's the Latin for tuneth tattlings." Or they jeer, that such words are somehow vituperative; thus a good Church-woman, being persuaded by a neighbor to go to the Dissenting chapel, heard a philippic against the Establishment. She did not like it, but bore it with comparative patience till the preacher began calling the parson names; one name, she said, was too bad to mention, but at last she admitted that he had called her pastor an individual. Her instinct was correct; for in fact, who does like to be called an individual, though it is not, as she may have supposed, a scandalous offense? Nor perhaps will a sister Anglican ever convey her meaning nearer to the truth than when she argued, with gentle alliteration, "I like a mild minister, as opposed to the phrensyzing piety of Ranters and Hallelujah bands." At any rate, a good many adjectives must be cated out and "express the same idea," like a book, which must be with her the alternative for some time to come.

It is well to know the meaning of words, but there is also a satisfaction in hearing shrewd good sense canary itself through the plunders of an excusable ignorance. "You have been on the philosophy this morning," says an exasperated mother to her truant son. "You were I have?" is the scattered denial. "Yes, you have," she firmly rejoins; "I can see it by your trowsers." After all, there are minutely more people who know the difference of sound between philosophy and velocipede than can define what philosophy really is. Those in a rhetorical encomiate of the late Dr. Worcester, being on our side, I am in the habit of concluding his sermons with a text declaimed in the original Hebrew. Preaching to a village audience on one occasion he followed his usual custom. The Tiger, calling on a parishioner the following day, invited his comments on the sermon and discourse. "Yes, Sir," was the reply, "it was a very grand sermon, and the Scriptures thought so himself, for he finished it off with Hip, hip, hip, hurrah." Now the right view of this incident is not to laugh at the man for a blunder, but to admire his rightly take the nature of the preacher. Any one who has once heard Dr. Worcester will recall the jubilant emphasis of his delivery, and the unctuous self-satisfaction it conveyed. The meter might be Hebrew poetry, but the spirit of his wind-up was always in exact accordance with the rustic's interpretation of it.

Two times at at hand though we may not all live to see it, when this unpoetic philosophy of expression will be the way for another sort of dialect, and probably giving way to another dialect, and probably giving way after the fashion which is now the opposed extremes, and the clergyman who now instinctively delights to call themselves pastor.—The Saturday Review.

ROADWAYS OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—No country has been more favored by nature, with a greater variety and abundance of trees, yielding strong, beautiful and durable timbers, than the colony of New South Wales. With the exception of some parts of the Maneto, Murrumbidgee and Murray districts, good kinds of timber can be everywhere obtained. Of late years so much timber has been used for building and fencing, and employed for public works and corporation, that the supply of several valuable kinds has been considerably diminished. The trees, however, cut down for these purposes have been comparatively small in number compared with those destroyed since the introduction of the system of choosing land by free selection. Persons taking up land under this system almost invariably choose the more richly wooded places, fine timber-trees being proof of a good soil. It is compar Every but a few years since, nearly the whole of the Illawarra basin was covered with magnificent forests, consisting of trees of vast height and plants of exquisite beauty.

This kind of forest vegetation—locally called in the colony "brush," but more generally understood by "jungle"—is characterized by denseness of growth, the pliitude and beautiful diversity of the foliage, the presence of lofty climbing plants, which extend their slender pliant branches to considerable distances, and by the manner often embracing, as it were, into one common bond many of the loftiest and largest trees. None of these climbers produce wood of marketable value, although some have stems of at least two feet in diameter. Another characteristic of forests of this description is a thick undergrowth of numerous kinds of ferns and other plants. Palms and tree-ferns abound, the former reaching sometimes a height of at least 150 feet, the latter of from forty to fifty feet. On the stems and branches of the trees numerous kinds of ferns and orchids grow, which, with the other plants referred to, often give the forests quite a tropical appearance. Although such forests as these are confined for the most part to the valleys and banks of rivers eastward of the Great dividing range, yet in some remarkable instances they are found more inland, as at Mount Hay, Mount Wilson and Mount King George, shooting out from the midst of the Blue Mountain Range, like oases in the desert. On these the soil is of the richest kind, composed principally of disintegrated trap, and clad with noble timber trees of a brush character, the undergrowth being chiefly tree and other ferns. These four mountains are the more extraordinary from the fact that they are surrounded in all directions by others of a sandstone formation, covered by a wretched and sterile scrub, and some analysis of miserable growth. The soil of all brush-forest country is universally rich; and it is therefore to the cost of the colony that the first method of cultivation, and the destruction of the natural vegetation follows, as a matter of course. Forest fire and other similar causes, nearly the whole of the brush-forests of Illawarra, the Hunter, the Manning, the Hastings, the Bellinger, and the Clarence have been for the greater part cleared; and others, such as those on the Richmond and the Tweed, formerly so extensive, are fast falling victims to the undiscriminating axe of the settler.—Cross a West.

MINDS WITH SKYLIGHTS.—No, I continued, I don't want to have the territory of a man's mind fenced in. I don't want to shut out the mystery of the stars and the awful hollow that holds them. We have done with those hypethral temples that were open above to the heavens, but we can have attics and skylights to them. Minds with skylights—yes—stop, let us see if we can't get something out of that.

One-story intellects, two-story intellects, three-story intellects, with skylights. All fact collectors, who have no sign beyond their facts, are one-story men. Two-story men compare, reason, generalize, using the labors of the fact collectors as well as their own. Three-story men idealize, imagine, predict—their best illumination comes from above, through the skylight. There are minds with large ground floors, that can store an infinite amount of knowledge; some librarians, for instance, who know enough of books to help other people, without being able to make much other use of their knowledge, have intellects of this class. Your great working lawyer has two spacious stories; his mind is clear, because his attic floors are large, and he has room to arrange his thoughts so that he can get at them. Facts below, principles above, and all in ordered series; poets are often narrow below, incapable of clear statement, but with small power of consecutive reasoning, but still of light, if sometimes rather hazy or furniture, in the attics.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the Atlantic Monthly.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."—In reference to the authorship of the popular ballad, "Home, Sweet Home!" the following anecdote may be interesting to your musical readers. I was residing at Milan with my family at the time of the production of the opera of "Anna Bolena." We were very intimate with Mme. PASTA. I well remember her calling one day, and telling us she was very much discontented with her share in the partition of the last scene of the opera, and the added, "Yes! English have so many beautiful airs which you sing among yourselves, that I am sure you could help me." My mother, who was a very fine musician, mentioned "Home, Sweet Home!" as a song which its own air and words, and Miss PATON's singing, had made very popular in England. She sang it, and Mme. PASTA, sitting down to the pianoforte, said, "It will do. I are sure it will do. Dearest, adopted it accordingly, and thanked us for having got him out of his difficulty. As to the author, she, not having any musical books about me, I can only express a vague remembrance that it appeared first in a collection of foreign songs, with English words. The music, I believe, was arranged by BISHOP, and the words were either by BAILY or THOMAS MOORE. The air was Sicilian, and I particularly remember saying to Mme. PASTA that it was curious that an Italian air should get back to its "home" through an English medium.—The Athenæum.

DICKENS' ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF GRIP.—You will be greatly shocked (the letter is dated Friday evening, March 12, 1841,) and grieved to hear that the Raven is no more. He expired today at a few minutes after 12 o'clock at noon. He had been ailing for a few days, but we anticipated no serious result, conjecturing that a portion of the white paint he swallowed last Summer might be lingering about his vitals without having any serious effect upon his constitution. Yesterday afternoon he was taken so much worse that I sent for a surgeon for the medical gentleman (Mr. HERRING,) who promptly attended, and administered a powerful dose of castor oil. Under the influence of this medicine, he recovered so far as to be able at 6 o'clock P. M., to bite TOPPING. His night was peaceful. This morning at daybreak he appeared better, received (agreeably to the doctor's directions) another dose of castor oil; and partook plentifully of some warm gruel, the flavor of which he appeared to relish. Toward 11 o'clock he was so much worse that it was found necessary to muffle the stable-knocker. At half-past or three o'clock, he was heard talking to himself about the horse and TOPPING's family, and to add some incoherent expressions which are supposed to have been either a foreboding of his approaching dissolution or some wishes relative to the disposal of his little property. He breathed steadily till half-past five, when he suddenly died, in the arms of his master, who had been hurried in from a different part of the house. On the clock striking twelve he appeared slightly agitated, but he soon recovered, walked twice or thrice along the coach-house, stopped to bark, staggered, exclaimed "Hallo old girl!" (his favorite expression,) and died. He behaved throughout with a decent fortitude, equanimity and self-possession, which cannot be too much admired. I deeply regret that being in ignorance of his danger I did not attend to receive his last instructions. Something remarkable about his eyes occasioned TOPPING to run for the doctor at 12. When they returned together our friend was gone. It was the medical gentleman who informed me of his decease. He did it with great gentleness and delicacy, preparing me by the remark that "a jolly queer start had taken place in the Raven's constitution."—From the Life of Charles Dickens by John Forster.

NOTES ABOUT CUBA.

The African Slave Trade—Its Extension, Slavery and Emancipation—The Present Revolution—Its Cause and Its Ends.

To present in a connected form the principal facts of Cuba in the present Congress of the United States is the purpose of a pamphlet just issued under the above title by Francisco V. Aldrich, late Minister Commercial, Diplomatic and Consular Service. Without commenting critically on the contents, we do say that it is rather more compatible in tone than generally are statements of this character—we present a plain analysis of the subject, as stated by one Cuban authority, that sight themselves are representing the Republic of Cuba.

The African slave trade in Cuba first drew the attention of England in 1817, and Great Britain paid to Spain forever the latter solemnly engaged to discontinue the traffic in slaves. Spain, however, tolerated the importation of slaves, though from time to time royal mandates were issued urging the prosecution of the discontinue importation of slaves, imagined, during how ineffectual were the efforts of Spain to discontinue this nefarious traffic, owing the mother country to strenuous efforts, and then followed the wonder of how that, that of time.

The transportation of slaves continued, and in 1840 the British Government repeated the demands for the cessation of the trade in 1841. When upon regard to put a stop within the [illegible] of the treaty of 1817, but it took about 1845 before the new was passed. Its inefficiency was so evident that in 1845 Great Britain induced Spain to pass a law [illegible] to carry into its observance but certain [illegible] of these climbers produce wood of marketable value, although some have stems of at least two feet in diameter. Another characteristic of forests of this description is a thick undergrowth of numerous kinds of ferns and other plants. Palms and tree-ferns abound, the former reaching sometimes a height of at least 150 feet, the latter of from forty to fifty feet. On the stems and branches of the trees numerous kinds of ferns and orchids grow, which, with the other plants referred to, often give the forests quite a tropical appearance. Although such forests as these are confined for the most part to the valleys and banks of rivers eastward of the Great dividing range, yet in some remarkable instances they are found more inland, as at Mount Hay, Mount Wilson and Mount King George, shooting out from the midst of the Blue Mountain Range, like oases in the desert. On these the soil is of the richest kind, composed principally of disintegrated trap, and clad with noble timber trees of a brush character, the undergrowth being chiefly tree and other ferns. These four mountains are the more extraordinary from the fact that they are surrounded in all directions by others of a sandstone formation, covered by a wretched and sterile scrub, and some analysis of miserable growth. The soil of all brush-forest country is universally rich; and it is therefore to the cost of the colony that the first method of cultivation, and the destruction of the natural vegetation follows, as a matter of course. Forest fire and other similar causes, nearly the whole of the brush-forests of Illawarra, the Hunter, the Manning, the Hastings, the Bellinger, and the Clarence have been for the greater part cleared; and others, such as those on the Richmond and the Tweed, formerly so extensive, are fast falling victims to the undiscriminating axe of the settler.—Cross a West.

MINDS WITH SKYLIGHTS.—No, I continued, I don't want to have the territory of a man's mind fenced in. I don't want to shut out the mystery of the stars and the awful hollow that holds them. We have done with those hypethral temples that were open above to the heavens, but we can have attics and skylights to them. Minds with skylights—yes—stop, let us see if we can't get something out of that.

One-story intellects, two-story intellects, three-story intellects, with skylights. All fact collectors, who have no sign beyond their facts, are one-story men. Two-story men compare, reason, generalize, using the labors of the fact collectors as well as their own. Three-story men idealize, imagine, predict—their best illumination comes from above, through the skylight. There are minds with large ground floors, that can store an infinite amount of knowledge; some librarians, for instance, who know enough of books to help other people, without being able to make much other use of their knowledge, have intellects of this class. Your great working lawyer has two spacious stories; his mind is clear, because his attic floors are large, and he has room to arrange his thoughts so that he can get at them. Facts below, principles above, and all in ordered series; poets are often narrow below, incapable of clear statement, but with small power of consecutive reasoning, but still of light, if sometimes rather hazy or furniture, in the attics.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the Atlantic Monthly.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."—In reference to the authorship of the popular ballad, "Home, Sweet Home!" the following anecdote may be interesting to your musical readers. I was residing at Milan with my family at the time of the production of the opera of "Anna Bolena." We were very intimate with Mme. PASTA. I well remember her calling one day, and telling us she was very much discontented with her share in the partition of the last scene of the opera, and the added, "Yes! English have so many beautiful airs which you sing among yourselves, that I am sure you could help me." My mother, who was a very fine musician, mentioned "Home, Sweet Home!" as a song which its own air and words, and Miss PATON's singing, had made very popular in England. She sang it, and Mme. PASTA, sitting down to the pianoforte, said, "It will do. I are sure it will do. Dearest, adopted it accordingly, and thanked us for having got him out of his difficulty. As to the author, she, not having any musical books about me, I can only express a vague remembrance that it appeared first in a collection of foreign songs, with English words. The music, I believe, was arranged by BISHOP, and the words were either by BAILY or THOMAS MOORE. The air was Sicilian, and I particularly remember saying to Mme. PASTA that it was curious that an Italian air should get back to its "home" through an English medium.—The Athenæum.

DICKENS' ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF GRIP.—You will be greatly shocked (the letter is dated Friday evening, March 12, 1841,) and grieved to hear that the Raven is no more. He expired today at a few minutes after 12 o'clock at noon. He had been ailing for a few days, but we anticipated no serious result, conjecturing that a portion of the white paint he swallowed last Summer might be lingering about his vitals without having any serious effect upon his constitution. Yesterday afternoon he was taken so much worse that I sent for a surgeon for the medical gentleman (Mr. HERRING,) who promptly attended, and administered a powerful dose of castor oil. Under the influence of this medicine, he recovered so far as to be able at 6 o'clock P. M., to bite TOPPING. His night was peaceful. This morning at daybreak he appeared better, received (agreeably to the doctor's directions) another dose of castor oil; and partook plentifully of some warm gruel, the flavor of which he appeared to relish. Toward 11 o'clock he was so much worse that it was found necessary to muffle the stable-knocker. At half-past or three o'clock, he was heard talking to himself about the horse and TOPPING's family, and to add some incoherent expressions which are supposed to have been either a foreboding of his approaching dissolution or some wishes relative to the disposal of his little property. He breathed steadily till half-past five, when he suddenly died, in the arms of his master, who had been hurried in from a different part of the house. On the clock striking twelve he appeared slightly agitated, but he soon recovered, walked twice or thrice along the coach-house, stopped to bark, staggered, exclaimed "Hallo old girl!" (his favorite expression,) and died. He behaved throughout with a decent fortitude, equanimity and self-possession, which cannot be too much admired. I deeply regret that being in ignorance of his danger I did not attend to receive his last instructions. Something remarkable about his eyes occasioned TOPPING to run for the doctor at 12. When they returned together our friend was gone. It was the medical gentleman who informed me of his decease. He did it with great gentleness and delicacy, preparing me by the remark that "a jolly queer start had taken place in the Raven's constitution."—From the Life of Charles Dickens by John Forster.

The New-York Times.

SUNDAY MORNING, JAN. 14, 1872.

The New-York Times,
DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the present—continuing without fear or favor its war against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing influences and unprincipled partnerships, and its various contests have been crowned with universal approval. It has adhered to the platform given to the original promoters, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be truly represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public reposes in it. Two-and-all three of the original proprietors still remain in the factory, and guide it on all public questions. They assume that the TIMES shall continue to hold sway of all manner and magnitude influence and opinion, and aim to maintain the good body of the public, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a peculiarly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a fearless exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with unstinting energy every measure which seems to promote the welfare of the people.

The business office will be devoted to publishing plain and clear from political colors among the Republican journals. The distribution of the paper will be carefully full and trustworthy. Renewed exertions will be exhausted in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches during coming elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-Weekly edition; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings of the Tammany Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, an unexceptionable advertisement being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS.

The DAILY TIMES, per annum, exclusive of the Sunday Edition	$12
The DAILY TIMES, per month	1
The DAILY TIMES, per quarter	3
The SEMI-WEEKLY, per annum	5
The SEMI-WEEKLY, two copies, one year	8
The SEMI-WEEKLY, five copies, one year, and one copy to getter-up of club	20
The WEEKLY TIMES, per annum	3
The WEEKLY TIMES, five copies, one year	15
The WEEKLY TIMES, ten copies, one year, (and one copy to getter-up of club)	30
The WEEKLY TIMES, fifty copies, one year, (and one copy to getter-up of club)	150
The WEEKLY TIMES, twenty copies, one year, (and one copy to getter-up of club)	60
The SEMI-WEEKLY and WEEKLY mailed one year to clergymen at the lowest club rates.
Additions may be made to clubs at any time at the same rates they were received for the balance of time that the club runs for the year at the yearly rate.
Arrearages may be made to clubs at club rates.
These prices are invariable. Remit in drafts on New-York if possible, or in Post-Office Orders, or Money Orders, or Registered Letters.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES,
New-York City.

Notice.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. We cannot return any communications that are not available, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

To Advertisers.

☞ For the accommodation of up-town residents, advertisements for insertion in the TIMES will be received at No. 54 West 23d-st., junction of Broadway and 6th-av., and No. 1,342 Broadway, between 37th and 38th sts., at same rates as are charged at office of publication.

☞ The NEW-YORK TIMES has opened a branch office in Brooklyn at No. 44 Court-st., opposite the City Hall, where advertisements will be received until 5 P. M.

It is not often that we are able to agree with the leading articles of the Express, but last night's paper contained one with a large part of which, at least, we can fully concur. It points out that no particular Administration is on its trial, so much as the Administration of the New-York Custom-house, past and present. Reform is needed, and facts upon which to establish this reform. This is the idea we have endeavored to urge, and it seems to us to be lost sight of in the bitterness which evidently fills the minds of some of the parties engaged in the investigation. Let us have the whole truth. We fear there never was a Custom-house yet wholly free from suspicions of corruption; and that of New-York has certainly not been free for many years past. The evils attached to it are not to be traced to any one Collector or President; but we have great hope that they will now for the first time be removed. We object to have the present investigation made the ground of what the Express calls a "factious fight." Let us have fair play and the plain truth all round. Then everybody will be able to see clearly what reforms are necessary.

The election of JOSEPH SHANNON as Clerk of the Board of Aldermen is one which, in a body professing to represent Reform principles, was not fit to be made. Mr. COROVAN took the trouble of stating that he did not consider his position as a Reformer irreconcilable with a vote for SHANNON, and referred to a "certain understanding" which he believed justified it. The public have a right to know what this understanding was. The vote of November was a protest against all corrupt compacts, and if the intrigue which resulted in SHANNON's election does not fall under this designation, we are curious to know what other name can be claimed for it. If the majority of the Board of Aldermen wants to retain popular confidence for a day longer, they had better have fewer mysteries in their transactions. With a Tammany Republican as President, and one of the worst type of Tammany Democrats as Clerk, they need hardly be surprised if the people evince a very strong desire to have them, under the new charter, at once legislated out of office.

The Religious Lesson at the Post Near.

One of the positions in which dramatists are wont to portray the villain of their story, is that in which he at last begins to feel the structure of fraud and dishonesty, which he has been long and painfully rearing, crumbling around him. It is probably a mental condition true of every bad man's life. There comes a moment when the machinery of wrong he has so laboriously contrived seems to be giving way; when one after another of his elaborate combinations fails; when the building of dishonesty or cunning, with all its apparent completeness and splendor, seems breaking to pieces over his head. He sees that it is not man who is defeating him. It is some mysterious and higher Power. The laws of nature seem his enemies. The old sacrificial Hebrew expressed the idea in his grand way, when he spoke of "the stars in their courses fighting against" a Jewish hero.

The recent events in private life last week has been that something of this sort of impression—though probably in a much more matter-of-fact shape—has come upon TWEED from "Fonsi sudden, "taking off." In fact, if he and his fellow-conspirators had a shade of moral feeling left, the shot year would be full of such moral lessons to them. First, in the very height of their boasted success, a little more than a year ago, came the sudden and most inconvenient death of WINSLOW. This man, it is evident now, from the investigations of the Citizens' Committee, was the pivot on which all their strenuous plots of robbery and swindling turned. He prevented all those marvelous bills for plastering, plumbing and furnishing in the new Court-house. It was only through assignment to him that they could be settled. He, and after him WOODWARD, divided the plunder with TWEED, CONNOLLY and the unknown others who shared in it. The greatest plot for plunder which the Ring ever contrived—next to the Viaduct scheme—the Broadway widening enterprise, all hinged on the County Auditor, this WATSON. His sudden death threw this all out of gear, and must have been for all concerned a most damaging and perplexing thing to the conspirators. It perhaps left their future plots in dark stupid hands as WOODWARD's, and thus hastened their final disclosure. Through all this, though often striking in the dark, we continued battering at the gates of their "structure of corruption." We had, of course, no open and legal evidence, but the strongest circumstantial testimony; and we persevered in the attack till our friends themselves at times became disgusted at this monotonous reiteration of the severest charges. Yet we knew then—and we know now—how much the conspirators felt them. They resorted to bribes—and they attempted threats—to ward off or prevent the attacks.

Now, however, came their quarrel with Mr. O'BRIEN, and then the betrayal of their secrets by one of their tools. Even yet, so impregnable was their position, and so powerful the influence of their wealth and their political connection, that the most skillful and telling presentation of their atrocious frauds and swindlings was necessary to convince the Democratic masses. The storm, however, of popular indignation gradually arose, and under its pelting one of the conspirators broke the secret bond, and though he did not betray them, let honest men into a position where they could reach them. Gradually, step by step, the secret was gained into that complicated machinery of fraud, bribery and robbery which they had so cunningly put together. Now the great laws of Providence began to show themselves. The vast wealth they had accumulated melted away like the snows of Spring. The men whom they had bound to them by so many ties of mutual fraudulent gain and criminal service, abandoned them in their distress. The friends of their thefts fled with their share of the plunder, and left their benefactors in embarrassment. The rich, who had fawned on them in their power, disowned them. The poor forgot them. The thousand office-holders who had so long supported them joined in the cry against them. The great party who had won its victories so long through their stolen money rejected their old leaders.

They found themselves with scarcely a friend, and near the common jail. All banks or companies which had sought their patronage in the days of their guilty prosperity now found themselves involved in their ruin. Even their very names became a proverb for rascality, and a stain is left on innocent women and children who have had the misfortune to bear those names. For TWEED one support only remained—the power of the Erie Railroad Company, and the pecuniary and political assistance of an associate as audacious and unscrupulous as himself. Even this man, in the full effrontery of his vice, is cut down by the hand of a murderer, and TWEED is left alone to meet his approaching ruin. Surely the young men who have been dazzled and debauched by scenes of flaunting vice and open and gigantic fraud, such as those of TWEED, FISK and their associates, will gather some serious impression from their tragic histories. They must see that there is a mysterious and gigantic Power ruling the issues of human life, and inexorably, punishing the infraction of His laws, and not for a moment to be blinded by the glitter of false success, or forgetting the smallest wrong; that Power we call GOD.

Difficulties in the Way of Civil Service Reform.

The Civil Service Commission is understood to be engaged in the preparation of a code of regulations, making out the grades of the service, and prescribing the manner in which examinations shall be conducted, and the new system administered. It is already prescribed, by order of the President, and in circular instructions of the heads of Departments, that no person shall be admitted to the lowest grade of the service who does not pass a certain examination; that of those who do pass that examination the appointment to a vacant place shall be made from the best three; and that the higher grades shall be filled by promotions from the lower by means of like competitive examinations. The demarcation of the proposed grades, and the determination of the subjects and the manner of examination for the higher grades, cannot prove other than a matter of extreme difficulty. For the civil service is one of an almost infinite variety of employments, requiring a corresponding variety of natural ability and of acquirement. And, in the first place, what is to be regarded as the lowest grade of the civil service? Shall it include watchmen? They are as much sworn members of the service as a collector, an auditor, or a commissioner; and before a man is admitted, as did for watchman's place, must he pass an examination in reading, writing, and speaking the English language?

If the first grade is to begin above watchmen, shall it include messengers? If not, why? The reason would seem difficult to find. And yet many messengers have in past times been promoted to clerkships, the duties of which they have performed with marked ability and fidelity. As we rise to the consideration of the requirements for the higher grades, the question becomes more complicated. If the service was homogeneous, the task of the Commission would be more simple. But how shall such various services as those, for instance, of the Customs, the Post-office, the Patent Office, the Interior, the Light-house Board, and the Coast Survey, be grouped and assimilated? Even in the Customs, how are examinations to be prescribed which shall determine by grades the fitness of candidates for places or vacancies in their responsibilities, those of accountants, inspectors, appraisers, and correspondence clerks—to go no further? A summary be invaluable as an appraiser who could not write an intelligible official letter; an accountant fit to be an auditor might be worthless as an inspector; and a man who could barely pass his examination for the lowest grade of the service might, by his energy, his integrity, and his administrative capacity, be fitter for the post of Surveyor of the Port of New-York than many a graduate of Harvard.

In entering the civil service, and looking to promotion by competitive examination, must a man confine himself to the Department in which he receives an appointment, and to his special bureau of that department? Once in the Post-office, must he always remain in the Post-office? Once in the Customs, shall he never leave that branch of the service? And if in the Customs, must he expect to remain always either an accountant, for instance, or an appraiser? If not, how is his transfer, or his promotion, to be accomplished by competitive examination? And how is another very important question to be determined—that of personal fitness? Character and judgment are at least as important qualifications for public office as talent and acquirement; and, in many positions, tact and manner are qualities of the highest value. By character, we do not mean moral character, but that sum of intellectual and moral qualities which stamps the man, and which no study or practice can give or take away. This quality—if that can be called a quality, which is rather an essence—does, and should, raise a man in all kinds of business, in all relations of life, far more quickly and surely than any acquired knowledge, even that knowledge that is acquired by experience. Now, in what manner is this invaluable quality to be tested by a competitive examination? Rather, how are competitive examinations to be contrived that they shall not pass it over in its absolute exclusion?—a consequence of competition (should it so prove) much to be deplored. Indeed, so important is this element of character in any service that, undetectable as it seems to be by any system of questions or competitive tests, with all our admiration of the purpose and the plan of this Commission, we almost wish that they had left out competition from that plan, and had attained their end (which is ours) by establishing a prescribed examination, providing absolutely against removal except for cause, and leaving promotion to be attained through fitness and continuance in service. And with this question of promotion is connected that which must arise in the mind of all who consider this subject: "How is the continuation of this system to be secured?"—without which hope of promotion by examination is at an end. How can its continuance be secured without special legislation? The Commission can hardly expect in all Presidents the decision and purpose which Gen. GRANT has shown in this matter; and their experience with Congress should warn them not to look with too much confidence for the passage of laws that will extinguish Congressional patronage. If a man of the ordinary political stamp became President, he would soon destroy the entire fabric. It is only the much-abused President who has risen superior to the ordinary demands of the Fentons and Schurzes of political life.

Finally, how and by whom are examinations to be held, and, in the principal cities, where? In New-York, in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, where is the room large enough to hold those who will present themselves for an examination in reading, writing, and speaking the English language, eminence in which is to be the open portal to the emoluments of office, the first step to the position of Collector? Is the roof-tree of that building raised? Are its rafters spread? There are now on file in the Collector's office of this City more than three thousand applications for places in his gift. To what number may we suppose it will be swelled when it is announced that an Inspector's place has become vacant, and that all who wish to have it may present themselves for examination—no recommendations being needed? And how long would it take three examiners, working six hours a day, to decide who were the best three of even three thousand applicants?

These are some of the difficulties to be considered and adjusted by the Commission before we can look for the promulgation of their system of practice. We suggest them, we need hardly say, in the friendliest spirit, partly as hints to the Commission, and partly that the public may not impatiently suppose that so great and beneficent a reform as that which it is proposed to make in our Civil Service can be finally accomplished by the mere resolutions of a few able and conscientious gentlemen, and the hearty co-operation of the Chief Executive.

Spain and her Pretenders.

Gen. SICKLES is reported to have recently said that Spain will not pick a quarrel with us, for the simple reason that quarreling is a luxury which she cannot afford. Whether his Excellency said so or not, it is the truth. It would be the height of reckless folly for Spain at this moment to come to blows with a nation stronger than herself. Whatever may have been the moral progress of that country of late years, her material advancement continues at a lagging pace, not, so far as we can see, at a faster pace than much ground for expecting improvement. As to the financial and commercial condition of Spain, it adds the Journal des Deux Mondes, "its condition is generally reflected in the Budget and the characteristic feature of the Spanish Budget is the progressive increase of expenses." The fact is, that, despite what they will, to gloss over the state of the case, in reality a deficit is always to be found.

For several centuries every measure productive to the prosperity of a country has been pursued with the greatest success in Spain. Up to a comparatively recent date, the Church and the grandees were the principal monopolists. In either case, their estates were enormous, and unproductive through ignorance and neglect. When the Church property was confiscated, the management passed into the hands of the Government, and after a time into those of persons who bought them in. But so far as the enriching money from the sale goes, it may be doubted whether its ler proprietors are much more successful than the clerical. The military monopolists, the Dukes of MADRID, OSSUNA and others, have properties as large as average counties, but miserable roads and inept management combine to keep down the revenues which ought to accrue from these princely possessions. Moreover, the Spanish grandees have, in almost every case, been absentees from their estates; their rents have been spent in Madrid or Paris, and they have done little or nothing to stimulate enterprise or exertion in their country neighborhoods. The consequence has been that the country districts of Spain have been in a condition approximating to those of France in the middle of the last century. Every traveler who has passed from France to Spain must have been struck with the change from affluence to poverty on entering the latter. It is like that which impresses a stranger from this country when, after a run through Ireland, he reaches her wealthier sister. "If you wish to hear what war is, carry on a war in Spain," wrote CONDE. "If you wish to dine," wrote WELLINGTON, a century later, "you'd better bring your things, as I shall have nothing with me."

The Spaniards are not naturally a commercial people, but had they been endowed with the thrift and perseverance of the Scots, and the mercantile address of a Yankee, it may be questioned whether they would have become rich under such political conditions as those which have now for so long a time mared the fortune of their country. That the people themselves should not have recognized the true causes of their evils, and that "they who would be free themselves must strike the blow," may seem to the citizens of this country very difficult to comprehend; but it must be borne in mind that Spaniards have been more crushed by priests and priestcraft than the people of any country in the world, even the Papal States not excepted. Down to quite a recent date, it was punishable by law to circulate or sell Protestant books. Education was almost nil among the humbler classes, and an enormous staff of clergy was employed in pointing out to their flocks what a heinous offense was a thirst for all knowledge except that prescribed by the Church. The people have been compared to their asses, inasmuch as sufferance is the common virtue of both tribes. And, indeed, the endurance of these victims of superstition has been most remarkably displayed. Spain has now arrived at a point in her history when she must entirely change or rapidly sink in the scale of nations until she reaches the level of Mexico or a South American Republic. Her financial condition annually grows worse, and the ordinary means of meeting such a difficulty cannot be applied. In public, as in private life, their expenditure exceeds income; either reduction of the former or increase of the latter will obviously set matters right. But neither of these modes of treatment can be resorted to in Spain, for when a skilled financier has arranged matters never so wisely, in will step political troubles and scatter his schemes to the winds.

The Spanish national debt today is more than £213,000,518 sterling. "From the time of PHILIP I. downward, theologians have never been wanting," says FOAN, "to prove the religious, however painful, duty of bankruptcy, particularly in contracts with various heretics." In 1851, the Spanish Government performed this "painful duty," by converting a portion of its indebtedness into what it euphemistically called "passive stock"—in other words, they refused to pay interest. This resulted in Spanish stocks disappearing from the London and Paris money markets, a sequence which proved so extremely inconvenient to Spain in 1867 that she ventured to set aside a sum of money annually for the ultimate liquidation of the Spanish debt. This, coupled with the overthrow of ISABELLA's Government, tended to give Spain a great lift in the financial world, which bore fruit a few months ago, when a further loan was required. But since then the Spanish Government has positively been seriously contemplating the imposition of a heavy tax upon the interest of the foreign debt, thereby insuring the credulous beings who believed in Spanish stock with renewed apprehensions.

The establishment of King AMADEUS on the throne has failed to give permanence and security to the character of the Government. Not that the young King himself has behaved, otherwise than with moderation and good sense, but Spanish politicians have not followed his example. Instead of sinking differences, with the great aim of lifting their land out of its lamentable plight, the liberal leaders have passed the last four months in factious strife between themselves. Is this a line of conduct calculated to inspire confidence for the future; and, further, is it commendable, duly allowing for the enormous amount of human folly that there still are statesmen who in the great of our going to war with Spain would find the funds? Without doubt old it would be there much ground for expecting improvement. As to the financial and commercial condition of Spain, it adds the Journal des Deux Mondes, "its condition is generally reflected in the Budget and the characteristic feature of the Spanish Budget is the progressive increase of expenses." The fact is, that, despite what they will, to gloss over the state of the case, in reality a deficit is always to be found.

For several centuries every measure productive to the prosperity of a country has been pursued with the greatest success in Spain. Up to a comparatively recent date, the Church and the grandees were the principal monopolists. In either case, their estates were enormous, and unproductive through ignorance and neglect. When the Church property was confiscated, the management passed into the hands of the Government, and after a time into those of persons who bought them in. But so far as the enriching money from the sale goes, it may be doubted whether its ler proprietors are much more successful than the clerical. The military monopolists, the Dukes of MADRID, OSSUNA and others, have properties as large as average counties, but miserable roads and inept management combine to keep down the revenues which ought to accrue from these princely possessions. Moreover, the Spanish grandees have, in almost every case, been absentees from their estates; their rents have been spent in Madrid or Paris, and they have done little or nothing to stimulate enterprise or exertion in their country neighborhoods. The consequence has been that the country districts of Spain have been in a condition approximating to those of France in the middle of the last century. Every traveler who has passed from France to Spain must have been struck with the change from affluence to poverty on entering the latter. It is like that which impresses a stranger from this country when, after a run through Ireland, he reaches her wealthier sister. "If you wish to hear what war is, carry on a war in Spain," wrote CONDE. "If you wish to dine," wrote WELLINGTON, a century later, "you'd better bring your things, as I shall have nothing with me."

The Spaniards are not naturally a commercial people, but had they been endowed with the thrift and perseverance of the Scots, and the mercantile address of a Yankee, it may be questioned whether they would have become rich under such political conditions as those which have now for so long a time mared the fortune of their country. That the people themselves should not have recognized the true causes of their evils, and that "they who would be free themselves must strike the blow," may seem to the citizens of this country very difficult to comprehend; but it must be borne in mind that Spaniards have been more crushed by priests and priestcraft than the people of any country in the world, even the Papal States not excepted. Down to quite a recent date, it was punishable by law to circulate or sell Protestant books. Education was almost nil among the humbler classes, and an enormous staff of clergy was employed in pointing out to their flocks what a heinous offense was a thirst for all knowledge except that prescribed by the Church. The people have been compared to their asses, inasmuch as sufferance is the common virtue of both tribes. And, indeed, the endurance of these victims of superstition has been most remarkably displayed. Spain has now arrived at a point in her history when she must entirely change or rapidly sink in the scale of nations until she reaches the level of Mexico or a South American Republic. Her financial condition annually grows worse, and the ordinary means of meeting such a difficulty cannot be applied. In public, as in private life, their expenditure exceeds income; either reduction of the former or increase of the latter will obviously set matters right. But neither of these modes of treatment can be resorted to in Spain, for when a skilled financier has arranged matters never so wisely, in will step political troubles and scatter his schemes to the winds.

The Spanish national debt today is more than £213,000,518 sterling. "From the time of PHILIP I. downward, theologians have never been wanting," says FOAN, "to prove the religious, however painful, duty of bankruptcy, particularly in contracts with various heretics." In 1851, the Spanish Government performed this "painful duty," by converting a portion of its indebtedness into what it euphemistically called "passive stock"—in other words, they refused to pay interest. This resulted in Spanish stocks disappearing from the London and Paris money markets, a sequence which proved so extremely inconvenient to Spain in 1867 that she ventured to set aside a sum of money annually for the ultimate liquidation of the Spanish debt. This, coupled with the overthrow of ISABELLA's Government, tended to give Spain a great lift in the financial world, which bore fruit a few months ago, when a further loan was required. But since then the Spanish Government has positively been seriously contemplating the imposition of a heavy tax upon the interest of the foreign debt, thereby insuring the credulous beings who believed in Spanish stock with renewed apprehensions.

The establishment of King AMADEUS on the throne has failed to give permanence and security to the character of the Government. Not that the young King himself has behaved, otherwise than with moderation and good sense, but Spanish politicians have not followed his example. Instead of sinking differences, with the great aim of lifting their land out of its lamentable plight, the liberal leaders have passed the last four months in factious strife between themselves. Is this a line of conduct calculated to inspire confidence for the future; and, further, is it commendable, duly allowing for the enormous amount of human folly that there still are statesmen who in the great of our going to war with Spain would find the funds? Without doubt old it would be

Letter Writing in Our Time.

It is quite startling to be told, as we are by the Court Calendar of Gotha, just come to hand, that so many letters are now written, by the leading people of Christendom. Then, in round numbers, by the last returns, Prussia conveyed annually by mail over three hundred and fifty-four millions of separate letters, of which sixty-eight millions belonged to Paris; the North German Longue, two hundred and forty-eight millions, or eight and three-tenths to each person; Italy, seventy-nine millions, or three and one-tenth; Switzerland, forty-five millions, or eighteen to each person; Great Britain, eight hundred and eight millions, or twenty-five to each person; Russia, twenty-two millions, or three tenths to each person; Austria, sixty-nine millions, or four and nine-tenths to each one; the United States, five hundred and thirty-one millions, or fifteen private letters to each person. Thus it will be seen that Great Britain stands first in relative number of letters, Switzerland next, the United States third, and Russia last. The whole number of private letters set down in the tables of the leading nations amounts to about two thousand five hundred millions, and the official letters, which are reckoned by themselves, amount to some three hundred and sixty millions more, making a total of not far from three thousand millions of letters yearly.

Russia stands at the foot of the list, and her proportion is only three letters for every ten persons, or fifty times less than the proportion of letters to each person in the United States. The reason of this small proportion is probably the enormous distances within the Russian Empire, the want of good roads, the backwardness of most of the people, and the undeveloped state of education and thought among them. It is remarkable that in Russia the number of official letters falls short of the number of private letters only fifty thousand a year, while in France the excess of private letters is three hundred and thirty-three millions, and in the United States four hundred and thirty-one millions. These figures show that in Russia the mail is about as much the organ of the Government as of the people, and that the national idea is relatively stronger than the personal and domestic sentiment in the matter of letter writing.

How many letters are written on matters of business we have no way of deciding, but we know very well that all business requires correspondence, that all credit implies letter writing, and that the opening of new roads and lines of communication is constantly increasing the financial work of the mail. Every month, quarter-day and New Year brings its avalanche of letters, which do not always inclose money, and very often ask for it; and if a quiet citizen is often alarmed at the contents of his own modest letter-box, what must be the dismay of the corresponding clerk of a great firm, who has a huge letter-bag by every great steamer to look over and answer? The mercantile letters of New-York City are of themselves every year a record of the material interests of the world, and if they could judiciously be collected and tabulated they would nobly illustrate the cosmopolitan character of our business, and the connections of our people with all lands and nations.

It is evident that our modern letters are not generally as long and labored as the old-fashioned epistles that so often discoursed of love, philosophy, politics, and religion, as if the whole world were waiting the issue. Paper and postage are so cheap that we now write often, and therefore briefly, as the change from old style of letter paper to the new style shows. Then again, we all correspond now with our friends virtually by the Press, and while authors print their mature thoughts in newspapers and magazines, they who do not presume to write articles themselves are fond of sending to their friends their favorite journals; and, in fact, all persons who read the same paper are virtually in a daily or weekly correspondence with each other, and take great comfort in that fact. Every American abroad feels himself at home at once when he gets hold of a copy of his own familiar paper, and his eagerness to know the news combines with his delight in knowing that that that same paper has been read by his family and friends at home. Thus the newspaper is a grand circular of love as well as business, and helps out the correspondence of the world.

But notwithstanding these new agencies of communication, some of the diminished size and elaborateness of our modern letters, their number, frequency, and close connection with our passing life and times, make them more important; and thus our postal system may be regarded as a constant circulation of our personal and social vitality, the heart-beat and nerve vibration of our whole body. By its agency we express at once every affection of home and friendship, and we send everywhere with our private sympathy the important news and stirring thought of our day and circle. The sum total of feeling and opinion thus conveyed deep much to form the spirit of the age and the thinking of our race. The old Apostles changed creeds and systems by epistles, and the new mission of truth and good will have the same instruments in greater numbers if with less inspiration. It is an interesting question, How much has private letter-writing had to do with the revolutions of the last hundred years, that have made the nations over again?

This dynamic, or power view of letters is [illegible] by death, and it would lead us to ask how much of the fresh impulse and determined will of our time was set by the pen in this way, and how far characters are formed and purposes moved by such letters? Who can doubt that the millions of private letters that go every year from our America to Europe are strengthening our good sense and wealth abroad, and leading millions of another people to love our liberty, copy our institutions, and seek our shores?

Ought not more attention to be given to this whole subject, and would it not be well if we could have in our new Museum an epistolary department, that should represent the form and history of letter-writing and carrying, in all ages—from the waste times when savages sent word of war or peace by shells, pipes, or feathers, to those latter days when swift cars or steamers carry messages of love or money to every land and over every sea? This collection has never been made in any museum that we know of.

Apartment Houses.

A large class of the people of New-York looked forward hopefully to the completion of the first apartment-house undertaken by Mr. STUYVESANT. For many years the great want has been cheaper rents for respectable and cultivated people of moderate incomes, and thousands of heads of families, therefore, watched with deep interest this experiment of a great real estate owner in a direction which promised them relief from the insupportable burden of the existing rates of house rent. Mr. STUYVESANT was rewarded for his outlay with a handsome interest on his money. His apartments were speedily filled by a very desirable class of tenants, and there were, perhaps, ten applicants for each one of them. But there was disappointment at the prices charged, and not one of those who ventured upon the experiment of living in apartments were entirely satisfied with the results; yet as a rule the new plan worked fully as well as could have been expected. The success of Mr. STUYVESANT encouraged other land-owners to either alter old houses into apartment-houses or build new ones adapted to that method of division. The consequence is that today, there are in New-York eight or ten buildings of this sort, most of them large and well filled. Yet the class who were specially to be benefitted by them and saved the necessity of emigration to New-Jersey or Brooklyn or Westchester, have obtained scarcely any relief. Perhaps the great demand for such apartments helped to raise their rental; the fact that they are, with but two or three exceptions, situated in the most fashionable parts of the City, where land is of the greatest value, is, however, the chief cause. But whatever the reasons or excuses for it, apartments of any size, that rent as those do for from one thousand two hundred to five thousand dollars a year, do not solve the question of where in New-York shall a man with a family and an income of from three to five thousand a year live. It is true, there are small apartments of two or three rooms to be had in these houses for perhaps eight hundred dollars a year. But they are suitable only for bachelors or newly-married people. In one of the newest of these houses the lowest rent is two thousand dollars, and from this the price runs up to five thousand dollars a year. To occupy that at the bottom of the scale would require a man with a wife and two or three children to have an income of at least six, eight or ten thousand dollars, and even more than that if he went into society, or indulged in any extravagancies. And as to the like occupant of the highest priced, if he lived relatively, he would need double the highest of these figures, or if not quite that, at least thrice the amount of his rental. It is true that there is some saving in service—the number of servants may be less than in a large house, for which the same rent is charged—but that will not be very great. In fact, such houses as this of which we are speaking, and the three others on Fifth-avenue, must, so long as their charges are kept as at present, be occupied rather by those who wish to save the trouble of house-keeping, than those who are chiefly intent on economy. And even the apartment-houses at the east of the town, with their rentals varying from twelve hundred to two thousand dollars, require of from their occupants, if heads of families of any size, incomes varying from four to six thousand dollars a year, or even more, if they venture upon many luxuries.

So a great class of intelligent, useful, well-educated and cultured people still finds itself banished from the City to the suburbs if it wishes to enjoy the comforts of a home of its own. What is needed is the building of apartment houses suitable for respectable families, that shall furnish apartments at rent varying from four to eight hundred dollars a year. Such houses, of course, cannot be on Fifth or Madison avenues, or in close proximity to those fashionable streets; nor need they have elaborately-finished fronts, so long as the walls are strong, the apartmental divisions convenient and suitable, and the wood-work appropriate. They will have to be put on side streets where property is comparatively low, and yet where decent situations can easily be found.

Free Public Libraries.

We have already briefly referred to the bill introduced by Mr. JUDD, in the Assembly, looking to the establishment of a free library system in this State, similar to that of Massachusetts, and to be sustained by a per capita tax annually assessed upon the population in such localities as may choose to adopt such a system. It may be that the proposition of Mr. JUDD is not all that it should be, as regards details and provisions, but that the object proposed is of great importance, few will be inclined to question. In this matter of free public libraries New-York is sadly wanting. The Astor Library, as we have often had occasion to complain, comes far short of being what its founder probably designed it to be, and is practically a failure as either a free or public library in any just sense of the term. Popular it certainly is not, and, so greatly is it lacking in most of the essentials of a public library, that its stores might almost as well be under lock and key, for any use they serve the masses of the people can set thereto.

Other cities in our country have taken the lead of us a long way in the matter of a free distribution of books among the people. Notably, Boston has, in her splendid Public Library, met and answered successfully all the questions and obligations to the system as a practical scheme. There, 16,000 volumes are open to the public from ten to thirteen hours a day, according to the season, and nearly one-fourth of these books are subject to the order of anybody who wishes to take them home, the sole condition being that the applicant shall give the names of two citizens as sureties. It is noteworthy that although the issues of books in 1869 were 316,072, only twenty volumes were lost during the year. The workings of the Boston Library are admirable in all their details, and its success has been complete. Not only in Boston, but in Newton, Charlestown, Hingham, Chelsea, Cambridge, Brookline, Arlington, Brighton, Watertown, Lynn, Lowell, Fitchburg, New-Bedford, Worcester, and some forty other Massachusetts towns and cities, the free library system has been introduced with marked results. New libraries are constantly forming all over the State, and the once doubtful problem of the safety of lending books to the people has received its full solution. At the West—in Cincinnati and St. Louis—public libraries have been formed which promise to equal in usefulness, if not in extent and value, the pioneer institution in Boston. And other cities, outside of our own State, are fully awake to the possibilities for good which the system envelops.

In England a free library act has been in operation since 1855, whereby towns of five thousand inhabitants are authorized to levy a per capita tax of one penny for library purposes. In thirty-four towns these taxes are levied, and thus are supported twenty reference libraries, and forty-four circulating libraries, aggregating half a million volumes, and issuing annually to the people three million books. France, a year or two ago, could point to three hundred towns and villages having free public libraries, managed and supported by some similar system. Besides these, there formerly were 340 provincial libraries open to the public, and of these 302 were both reference and circulating, the other thirty-eight being exclusively circulating libraries. The records show that three years ago the free town and communal libraries of France contained 4,122,000 volumes and 44,070 manuscripts. Almost every large town in Belgium has its library, long established, and within easy reach of every one disposed to use it. In Germany there is a system of Volks bibliotheken, in Berlin, Leipsic, and other cities, which puts books freely into the hands of the lower classes, while the large and valuable collections are open, with few restrictions, to the more critical and cultured reader. Even Italy has for several years enjoyed the advantages of popular circulating libraries, and at least thirty towns and cities have established such libraries since 1861.

The intelligent and devoted Superintendent of the Boston Public Library, Mr. JUSTIN WINSOR, (whose report for 1869 has furnished us many of our figures,) proposes even the further popularization and diffusion of the library treasures in his charge, by the establishment of branch libraries, like those of our Mercantile Library Association, whereby books may be almost thrust into the people's hands. There is something humiliating in the reflection that our City and State have so long ignored this important subject, and that we are today so far in the rear of other States and countries. It is certainly to be hoped that the bill introduced by Mr. JUDD will, at least, serve to open the eyes of the Legislature to the necessity of action, and so pave the way for the formation of numerous libraries, which shall be both free and public.

THE RUSSIAN PRINCE.

Buffalo Hunting on the Plains by the Grand Duke—Preparations Made for the Comfort of the Party.

NORTH PLATTE, Nebraska, Jan. 12.—The Grand Duke ALEXIS and party arrived here this morning at 7 o'clock. They took breakfast on the cars. Five ambulances and a light wagon for baggage, and a carriage for the Duke met the party, and they started immediately for the camp. The permanent camp for the buffalo hunt is on Red Willow Creek, about fifty miles southwest of this post. The camp consists of two hospital tents, ten wall tents, and a tent for servants and soldiers. Three of the wall tents are floored, and the Grand Duke's is carpeted. Box stoves and Sibley stoves are provided for the hospital and wall tents. The hospital tents are used as dining tents. An extensive culinary outfit is also taken along; and also 10,000 rations each of flour, sugar and coffee, and 1,000 pounds of tobacco for the Indians. Company K of the Second Cavalry, under command of Capt. BEACH, is at the camp. They went out several days ago and have everything in the best possible shape. Company E, of the Second Cavalry, under command of Lieut. SNOWDEN, acts as escort for the party to the camp. The whole is under the command of Gen. FARNHAM, of the Omaha Barracks; Lieut. HAYS is Quartermaster of the expedition. Comanche Buffalo Bill, met the Duke and party here. A relay of horses is at Medicine Creek, about half way to the camp. The party expect to make the trip in eight hours. The buffaloes are in great numbers within ten miles of the camp. It is reported that Indians are hovering about the camp, with their families, and others were coming in rapidly. It is expected that the war parties of SPOTTED TAIL, WHITESIDE, WAR BONNETT and BLACK HAT will be there, with their respective chiefs and bands.

A New-York Victim of Spanish Cruelty.

From the Saratoga Republican, Jan. 11.

Thirteen years ago a young and beautiful lady of this village, Miss ELLA KNOWLE, whose of Dr. DANIEL KNOWLE, with whom she resided, married JOAQUIN AGRAMONTE, a young Cuban, who had been sent here by his parents for the purpose of taking advantage of the educational facilities afforded by the Saratoga Academy, an institution then in the full tide of prosperity. Young AGRAMONTE took his bride home, and since that time they have lived in happiness and affluence on their plantation at Puerto Principe, their marriage being blessed with three children. Upon the breaking out of the Cuban Revolution, JOAQUIN AGRAMONTE, the son of a Spanish father, who married an own sister of the celebrated Cuban General, AGRAMONTE, espoused the cause of the Cuban Patriots. The fact that he was a relative of the great Cuban General was enough to seal his fate. His plantation was visited by the Spanish Partisans, JOAQUIN AGRAMONTE disappeared, and that the mansion burned to the ground, and the entire estate confiscated. Two of the children died, and the death of horror so shocked Mrs. AGRAMONTE that it has affected her mind. She is now here with her whole. Dr. KNOWLE, her aged father, lives near and under whose kind treatment it is hoped and believed that her mind will soon be fully restored.

AMUSEMENTS.

"JOHN GARTH" AT WALLACK'S.

Bad plays are often made out of good novels; but it is not often that a bad novel furnishes material for a good play. Mr. BOUCICAULT'S "John Garth" is one of the exceptions. It is better as a drama than Mr. Robinson's book is as a story, and it not only pleases a general audience, but stands in most aspects the test of critical examination. All plays are well mounted at WALLACK'S, and, popular as the house is, it is superfluous to say that there is a wide margin of diversity in the custom of various pieces brought out there. Hence, too much stress need not be laid on the mounting of "John Garth" as an exceptional element of its prosperity. The old anomaly of the casket being finer than the gem is unthought of here. Charming as the stage accessories at this house have often been found to be, and tasteful in ways not thought of elsewhere, it has been seen that such frames alone are not enough. In other words, a play cannot be galvanized into life by them if it has not a share of intellectual vitality besides. Fresh blue skies of truly delicately natural, unattained somehow in other point-rooms; exquisite silvery of rustic scenery, ingenious "re-arrangements" and the many other characteristic touches of taste and feeling seen at this theatre are fine in themselves, but they will not, unaided, make a telling comedy. There must be freshness, or strength, or clever juxtapositions of these too as well. Now there are all of these in "John Garth," and when it is said that the prominent parts are also boldly and cleverly acted, the issues of prosperity become plain.

The hero, John Garth himself is a figure of no little originality. An "eighthman" who is unconventional, a person almost universally disliked or despised who yet deserves most thoroughly to be loved and respected, is certainly not an every-day character. The simple of the text is, so to say, made up of the monotonous (the quiet grays, of every-day life; but romance and vivid color are shot athwart these by the appearance of Garth and by that of Barrett, who is as highly eccentric in vice as Garth is in virtue. Mr. LESTER WALLACK plays Garth with singular force and depth of feeling. The charm of the character is that he is always revealing something unexpected. You think he will do or say one thing, and he says or does another. This is carried out with amazing consistency to the close, where Garth marries the last person on earth you would previously suppose he would marry. From his opening scene, where he stalks forth, his costume pictures as among the commonplace, his face bronzed with the South American sun, his eye eager with curiosity to know what, in all these years of absence, has happened to his child and his home, Mr. WALLACK'S embodiment of Garth is strikingly artistic. It is noticeable of this performance that, while the denoted element of surprise is almost always prominent, the impression left on the mind is never unnatural or inharmonious. When you come to analyze, that is, you see that however strange such a speech or action might be in another man, it is legitimate and consistent in John Garth. To grasp such complex idiosyncrasies with unerring tact, and so to present them as to leave this impression of truth on the mind is a histrionic triumph and this Mr. WALLACK certainly achieves.

Mr. FISHER'S Barrett helps the play greatly. It is one of the finest actor's best pictures, and it is hardly to be conceived, without witnessing the process, how a creature so detestable as Barrett should be made not only so amusing, but so oddly attractive. You like the horrible scoundrel in spite of yourself, and, satisfied as you are that he ought to be hung, you would almost connive at his escape from even the most trifling of punishments. There is a reality, too, about Barrett, bizarre as he is, that comes home to most experience. Most of us have some scores at some time, one or more of these rascally fathers, these men whose selfish indulgence is their god, who have not the faintest conception that they owe any duty whatever to their children, and whose weaknesses or crimes have forced upon those children the bitterest of fights with the world to regain lost position and undo the misery an unnatural parent has caused. Society is harder than John Garth, and does not forgive as he does, and this is a difference in favor of the play. Mr. WALLACK and Mr. FISHER pretty well engross the laurels of this representation. Miss MORDAUNT is somewhat listless and deficient in alertness and subtlety for Hester, and Mrs. JEFFERSON is scarcely adapted to the blooming Minnie. Despite minor drawbacks, however, "John Garth" is one of the most enjoyable dramatic entertainments now to be seen in the Metropolis.

THE GRAND-OPERA-HOUSE.

Mr. FLORENCE'S capital impersonation of Obenreizer has attracted deserved admiration at the Grand Opera-house, this week. "No Thoroughfare" has been carefully and completely mounted and will probably hold the bills for some time. We are informed that the death of Mr. FISK will not alter existing arrangements at this splendid theatre. Messrs. HAYMAN & COLE have a long lease and will carry out the arrangements previously made. The Sunday evening concerts by the Ninth Regiment Band will begin again on the 21st inst., under the direction of Mr. E. S. JACKSON, who, it is rumored, will likewise assume the management of the Central Park Gardens, which will be opened, as projected by Mr. FISK, for the Summer season. These enterprises will be carried out, it is understood, on the account of the deceased speculator's surviving family.

THE BENEFIT TO MATILDA HERON.

We are glad to know that the proposed testimonial to Miss MATILDA HERON bids fair to be exceedingly successful. The original intention was to have given the performance on the 12th inst., but, in order to gain certain advantages and avoid certain inconvenience, the afternoon of Wednesday, Jan. 17, has now been definitely fixed upon for the occasion. It will be owned that the bill of attractions is an extraordinary one. What may hereafter be added to it we know not, but at present the arrangements are as follows: Miss JANAUSCHEK will appear in scenes from "Macbeth," Mr. EDWIN BOOTH will play Petruchio, Mr. WALLACK'S company will give an act of "Masks and Faces," Mr. DALY'S company will give an act of "Diverse," and an act of the "School for Scandal" will introduce Miss LAURA KEENE and MARK SMITH. Moreover, the wondrous Hebrew, Mr. J. LEVY, will blow his magic horn, Mlle. PAULINE MINGE will sing a second from Italian opera, the wonderful MARIONI will convulse the audience with their unique feats, Mr. DAN BRYANT and Mr. DAVE REED will deport themselves in the perennial "Shoo Fly," the marvelous boy, Master FRED ROSELLE, will do something to some poetry, and all manner of other vocal and gymnastic artists will lend neat and variety to the programme. It is right to say that the managers and the profession have responded nobly to this call made upon them; and it is right now to ask the public to do their share toward making this benefit a grand success. The claims of MATILDA HERON on the sympathy and support of the community are well known. The need that these claims should be duly recognized at the time is pressing. We trust that it is superfluous to say more, and hope that every theatre-goer in New-York will buy a ticket for the testimonial, whether he is able to go to it or not.

FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

"Diverse" still continues its remarkable run, and the manager is just now making one of his periodic efforts to get something by way of change before his patrons, and whether he will be again beaten by those patrons, or he was before, through their determined purpose to see "Diverse" and nothing else, remains to be seen. New scenery has been painted for "Pygmalion," and it is understood that, in the fullness of time, this will be Mr. DALY'S next production. Miss ADELE BERTH, who has been winning golden opinions from all sorts of people at Buffalo, is to act her original part in this drama, and her first appearance in New-York since her return from England is sure to be heartily welcomed. Miss ETHEL has been studying her profession, we are told, with zealous industry, and

[illegible]

THE STADT-THEATER.

[illegible] Mr. THOMAS' new concerts. The series of symphony concerts commenced at Steinway Hall on Monday by Mr. THOMAS, was ended with a performance by which Miss MARIE KRONE benefited, last night. The audience was as large as it ought to have been, but its evident interest in the event and its enthusiasm went far toward compensating the artists for the thinness of numbers. Miss KRONE contributed to the entertainment LISZT'S "Concerto Symphonique," No. 1, LISZT'S concerto No. 1, in E flat, Chopin's polonaise in A flat and a waltz by Rubinstein. The lady obtained LISZT'S work in two movements, on Wednesday, but yesterday's interpretation was much superior to that proceeding it, and the second movement, in scherzo, was played with exceptional dash and brilliancy. Miss KRONE is hardly equal to LISZT'S composition, which tries her's patience less than the concerto in A, but which invites the performer to almost as conspicuous a waste of skill and energy. The concerto could only have been improved upon by a variety of phrasing such as, for which Miss KRONE labors, she scarcely ever distinguishes; in some of intelligent reading and technique nearing nearer to better than her delivery of that characteristic. The principal orchestral pieces were RUBINSTEIN'S "Ocean Symphony," and a new "Introduction and Triumphal March," by M. LOUIS DACHAUER. The composition of the symphony, if it be is not to be credited with fecundity of ideas, one at least be granted for the introducing ridiculous effects as a result of a search for startling combinations. The adagio of the symphony is suave and elegant, but the motive of the second movement, a scherzo, is exceedingly trivial. The "Introduction and March," by M. DACHAUER, who is already known to the public by a very felicitous setting of the plaintive song from "Faust," which was part of a Philharmonic programme last year, is clearly from the pen of an accomplished musician, to whom none of the resources of an orchestra are concealed. In the division and alternation of the masses, as well as in many details of the scoring, the influence of WAGNER—a worthier influence could not be desired—are perceptible. The broad and well-defined theme of the march is cleverly handled by M. DACHAUER, who intends, we believe, to further elaborate his treatment of his subjects. The composition was much applauded. In addition to the foregoing, Mr. THOMAS has rendered the overtures to "Euryanthe" and to "Tannhauser," the allegretto from BEETHOVEN'S Eighth Symphony, "Traumerei," and SCHUBERT'S "Hungarian March," instrumentated by LISZT. A concerto for violoncello, by GOTTERMANN, was also played by Mr. JOSEPH DARR.

HOME CONCERTS.

Mr. STRAKOSCH'S Italian Opera Company entertained last week the public of Cincinnati. The cost and excellence of the performances suggested the following editorial comments to the Commercial: "It requires a manager of no ordinary nerve to bring out, even in cities like New-York, Italian opera with such strength of cast and completeness of chorus and orchestra as we find it produced by the Messrs. STRAKOSCH. In Paris and London the Governments come to the financial assistance of the managers, and by large subsidies enable them to meet the extraordinary drafts upon their resources. Without this aid it is doubtful whether the opera, the most expensive, as it is the most refined of entertainments, would not be an exotic there as in American cities. Here, however, the manager must rely upon the public for a fair remuneration, and to secure its favor it is primarily necessary that he should secure the best artists and the most effective accessories; and even then there is always a painful uncertainty whether his enterprise will be financially a success. It would be difficult to name an impresario of opera in America who, after the hard struggle of years, has retired upon a decent competence. Most of them have found themselves hopelessly involved as the end of a few seasons. The most enterprising, and, all in all, the most successful in familiarizing the American people with the best operas and the best artists, have been the Messrs. STRAKOSCH, to whose indefatigable energy we owe the extraordinary combination of talent now performing in Pike's Opera-house. The list of the great lyric actors and actresses whom they have persuaded to cross the Atlantic to entertain the sovereigns of the Republic, would comprise nearly all the finest talent that has latterly appeared in America. But, splendid as have been their managerial triumphs in the past, they are fairly eclipsed by the present achievement." It is pleasant to note that the audiences, by their numbers and applause, showed that they appreciated the boldness of the venture, and were satisfied by its results. Last night (Friday) Miss MAGGIE MITCHELL appeared in Titusville.... Mr. SANFORD was last week at the New-Orleans Varieties.... A new, and, it is said, handsome theatre has been erected in Chicago in five weeks, by a Mr. GARDNER. It is called the Academy of Music, and the Wyndham Comedy Company acted therein throughout last week.... Speaking of the delight manifested by an audience in Providence at Mr. SOTHERN'S performance, the critic of the Herald says: "How great the satisfaction this may be inferred from the almost continuous ripples of laughter which chased each other through the house, as frequently as rhythmic gentle beating of the soft swells on Newport beach on a tender Summer's day, these risible ripples varied with stronger surges of loud applause."..... Mr. JOHN OWENS was last week at the Louisville Opera-house.... Miss COONEY and her company were last week at Ford's Opera-house, in Baltimore.... Miss BORFANTI is dancing at the Holliday-street Theatre.... Herr WACHTEL sang last week at the National Theatre, in Washington.... "Olivette Ope" was acted at the Boston Globe last week.... Mr. FORREST acted last week at De Bar's Theatre, in St. Louis.... Friday and yesterday, Mme. JANAUSCHEK acted in Hartford.... Mme. VERNEZA was on the point of making her debut in San Francisco as an English tragedienne.... Mr. JOHN S. CLARKE was a passenger aboard the Algeria, now at this port from England.... Miss CARLOTTA LECLERCQ is sojourning in Boston.... JOAQUIN MILLER is reported to be writing a drama, whereof the scene is to be laid in California.... Mr. C. W. COULDOCK was last week at the Trimble Opera-house, in Albany.... The Parepa-Rose English Opera Company was last week, at the Boston Theatre.... Monday and Tuesday Mrs. MOULTON will sing in Philadelphia.

The Foreign Stage.

MR. WATTS PHILLIPS' NEW PLAY.

The London Daily News of Dec. 18, contains the subjoined appendix of the new play at the Princess':

"This theatre, which has been closed for some weeks, reopened on Saturday evening. The house was well filled, in this respect presenting an agreeable contrast to the general aspect of theatrical affairs, place of amusement during the last fortnight. After the performance of the preliminary farce, an entirely new and original drama, from the pen of Mr. WATTS PHILLIPS, and bearing the title of 'On the Jury,' was presented to the audience. This piece, which is in four acts, is of an elaborate kind, and great pains have evidently been bestowed on the preparation. The scenery is painted and arranged with great effect, and includes the now indispensable great realistic scene in which the spectator's feelings are harrowed by a spectacle of terror and distress. When we add, however, that both Mr. PHILIPS and Mr. WEBSTER sustain leading parts, while Miss HEATON and Miss JULIA DALY are intrusted with the representation of the chief female characters, it will be equally evident that the management have not chosen to rely upon the aid of the limelight and the paint-brush. Mr. PHILLIPS' drama is a story of the present day. His true hero is a broken-down old gentleman named Tibbets, who, having been convicted in America of fraud, has found his way to England with his only daughter named Edith, from whom

[illegible]

BROOKLYN NEWS.

Mr. Horsh Appeals for Action Against the Brooklyn Cow Stables.

The Grand Jury of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday, brought in thirty-six indictments and a letter from Mr. HENRY HORSH, condemning the Brooklyn cow stables, and requesting that some action be taken to remedy the evil in a manner. After some conference with the District-Attorney Judge GILBERT said that this Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has the sanction of the law of the State, and is, when properly regulated, to be protected when enforcing the statutes relating to cruelty. He intimated the hope that the Grand Jury would be in session for another week, and that if they desired to make an examination of the stables referred to by Mr. HORSH during that time, and report before Saturday, they were at liberty to do so.

The Wooster Academy of Music.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Academy of Music was held on Friday evening. The directors report the amount of capital stock paid in, $300,000; drafts due the Treasurer, $24,000; outstanding liabilities, $800. The Secretary reports that during the year a new story has been added to the saloon part of the building, the assembly-room has been repaired and other improvements made, at a cost of $12,000. The amount expended for new scenery and furniture was $7,807. The Treasurer reports the receipts for the year $47,324 97, and the expenses $34,653 97, leaving a balance of $12,671. Henry E. Pierrepont, L. B. Wyman, J. H. Prentiss, Marcellus Massey and Charles A. Townsend were elected directors.

The Debt of the City, as Reported by the Committee of Fifty.

The following is a statement of the debt of the city and county, as made by the Committee of Fifty, and as it was on the 31st of December, 1871:

Bonded city debt	$97,190,000
Bonded municipal debt	3,716,612
Net balance of city debt	$93,724,071
County debt	3,778,712
Total	$96,502,783

CLASSIFICATION.

Chargeable upon the city at large	$93,724,071
Chargeable to the first ward, and the Twenty-fifth, Twenty-first and Twenty-second Wards, Park Bonds	1,128,000
Chargeable to local assessments	2,349,707
Chargeable to the city and county at large	3,778,712
Total	$96,502,971

Water Famine.

The run on the Manhattan-avenue German Savings Bank has ceased. All the depositors except twenty have been paid, and these and many others who drew out their deposits received to stand by the bank.

The following prisoners were arraigned in the United States District Court, before Judge BENEDICT, yesterday: JOHN D. BOYCE, opening letters in the Eastern District Post-office, and embezzling money therefrom; pleaded guilty. JOHN WILLIAMS and JOHN D. BROWN, passing counterfeit United States greenbacks; pleaded not guilty.

On Friday afternoon ADAM RICH started from Winfield for New-York with a load of sheep. JOSEPH COGGAR, a Newtown farmer, found the wagon by the side of the road against the fence and the body of RICH under the hind wheel, at the bottom of Betts's Hill, on the Woodside and Blairville roads. The fond is in an awful condition. Therefore the jury convened the county and held it responsible for the death of RICH. He leaves a wife in destitute circumstances and three children.

WORDS FROM THE PEOPLE.

A Modest Request.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Please urge the Senate Investigating Committee to inquire of that body whether or not political parties, and official government, in Republican Pennsylvania, have for generations been prostituted and made subject to the Republican State Government in the year 1870-71? The State Conventions of those years were the most shameful prostitution of State patronage disgraced by this land-mortified Commonwealth. Gov. R. E. Pattison, though the only Wagon Representative, "the man behind the chair," was Mr. PATTISON forgotten the part he then played in connection with such pieces of political insolence as Dan Frick, Walter Stevenson, Gen. Morrison, Rufe Andrews, Jimmy Haggerty, Andy Blair, Charley Goddard, Jimmy Thompson, Jim W. Hazzard, and about fifty other State officials? Treasurer and Secretary, right forward, these Fairview barter-mistake, port-warden, state officers and reformers conducted themselves at the State Conventions of those years in such an extraordinary manner as to disgust all except those who were in the plot, and who were ready to profit at the expense of the State Treasury, and the merchants and importers of this city. Did these editorial questions of politics and service reform relate their measures, either in connection or in State interests, Mr. Editor, we need not ask you, as we do, if it would be the end of a time that the country has had the fruit. When the Rotten Ring stole control of the State and the Republican Party, the State was saved by the Tammany Ring. Behold, upon Fairview the United States Senate. CORRESPONDENT.

An Old Tribune Reader's Opinion of the Tribune.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Having been a life-long admirer of the Tribune, I confess that I at first looked with jealousy upon the Times in its bold onslaught upon Tammany, for as the Tribune had always been first and foremost in all political reforms, I considered it the peculiar province of that journal to take the lead in this grandest and most gigantic of fights for the common weal. That it should be thus supplanted and outgeneraled upon its chosen battle-ground was not at all agreeable to me; that it should, by any fortuitous circumstance, be compelled to play second fiddle to any newspaper in Christendom, was antagonistic to my ideas of political and literary propriety. And when it fell into line and joined in the fray, its position inspired within me a feeling of sadness. True, it did not seem to exhibit quite the old-time earnestness, but how could it be expected so under such trying circumstances? Anxious as I was to see this fight waged to the bitter end, I almost cursed the day that saw the TIMES in possession of those Cox accounts. But my feelings soon underwent a complete revolution. The powerful and persistent blows of the TIMES, backed up by such an array of "hateful" figures, mysteriously obtained, were too much for the poor Tribune, and it soon became a question whether that paper was fighting the Ring or the Times with the greater ardor. Its jealousy was so manifest that it well-nigh overbalanced its efforts in the good work of reform, and alienated its best friends. In spite of its half way aid, however, the war on the Ring culminated triumphantly, and the Tribune, to recover lost ground, went to fighting Collector MURPHY and the Syracuse Convention. But the trick was too thin. The "green-eyed monster" stood out in such bold proportions that those who 10 times past received its lessons of moral boldness, now laughed while they deplore its folly. Its mad antics and squirmings are irresistible, surpassing even those of its brother screhead, the Sun. In its desperation it has made enemies of many of the prominent members of the party with which it has been a life-long co-worker, and brought down upon its inestimable and opportune aid the bitterness of a hundred years of hate. Its charge is only equaled by its inability to substantiate them, thus continually making everything clear as mud, and burning nobody.

What the Tribune proposes to do in the event of President Grant's renomination, we shall not pretend to conjecture. But if it will take the advice of an old friend, it will renounce politics, and turn its attention to the virtues of pig-iron and pumpkins. As a political power, the glory of the Tribune has departed. We have no idea, however, that our advice will be followed, and, to tell the truth, we don't know that it is doing as good a service in amusing the public, in which role it has proved itself such an adept, as in the more essential industries of life. Let the Tribune, then, go on in the work of "warning" everybody, no matter whether they are friend or foe, and I venture the prediction that it will, in good time, deserve what remains of its former reputation.

REFORM.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Jan. 11, 1872.

The Church of the Messiah.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your paper of last Monday was an account of what took place on Sunday morning at the Church of the Messiah. A plain statement of the facts will bring the truth to light. Rev. GEORGE A. HEPWORTH, on that occasion, stated publicly from a Christian pulpit that he had been insulted by me. I wish to place the whole facts on which his charge was founded before those who read his statements in your columns, and to ask them who was insulted, he or I.

The facts are these: Mr. HEPWORTH, as a Unitarian, was engaged originally to supply our pulpit for the term of two years. He declined to make any engagement for a period longer than that, stating at the time that after that period he desired either party to be at perfect liberty to terminate the contract. We agreed to this. His term of two years would have expired Oct. 6, last. We let our pews annually during the latter part of December, for the coming calendar year, and arrange all the secular business of the church accordingly. In letting the pews in December, 1870, for the year 1871, some objected to taking pews for the whole year on the ground that on the 6th of October we might be without a minister. To obviate this objection, an oral agreement was then made with Mr. HEPWORTH that the written contract should be terminated, but that he should consider himself pastor of the church without any written agreement. That we understood, would be good for the whole year 1871, the term for which we rented our pews. The salary for 1871 was fixed and provided for at the annual meeting early in January of that year. This was assented by all parties, including Mr. HEPWORTH, and continued through the year 1871. The salary was arranged for that year at $6,000.

The whole arrangement, however, was based upon the understanding, most clearly expressed in his sermons and conversation, that he was a Unitarian. But when he discovered and foresaw the Unitarian faith, all moral obligation to continue him as pastor of a church whose doctrines he had disavowed ceased. Our moral obligation ceased also with the year 1871. Our time to make the engagement for 1872 was Monday, Jan. 1. I did not learn of his change of faith till Wednesday evening, Jan. 3. I immediately asked him to state it in writing. This written statement of the fact of his change was not delivered to me until Saturday, Jan. 6. He had previously announced this intended description of our faith from the Board of Trustees that he was upon the point of commencing a new year of administration before he let us know it, and then we only obtained the fact by making a demand upon him. The conversation he held with the Board of Trustees was in effect, I believe, that I (I permitted to preach a single Sunday after the engagement expired with the old year, to give an opinion of thinking his whole salary of $6,000 for that Sunday only, or, if I did not think that Sunday only, I might preach another Sunday in order that he might be in THE POWER to prevent it. For the purpose of preventing the Church in the Messiah from a practical inability to fulfill many declarations not rendered, I, as official representative of the Board, and under legal advice, sent him the following business letter, which he had no right otherwise to interpret, as the insult he is related purely to secular matters. But, upon that this, he used only a garbled sentence from my letter, without any explanation even a proper character, giving a whole false impression of its nature and spirit, and throw himself upon the sympathies of a promiscuous audience, as I have said, had been insulted by me in this circumstance.

May the same time he suppressed entirely the fact that I had accompanied the business letter I sent him with a private letter, the character of which, if quoted, would have made the letter which will fully exhibit the complete and willful misrepresentation of the feelings of myself and the trustees with him:

(The official letter from me as President of the Board, written by my legal advisor:)

NEW-YORK, Jan. 6, 1872.

DEAR MR. HEPWORTH: As President of the Board of Trustees of the Church of the Messiah in New-York, it my duty in my official capacity to inform you that the pews in the church are rented for the year 1872, and that the rents are payable in advance. As soon as the contract for the rents of the pews is made, I will send you a copy of the rents and see able in determining the amount of income, we engage them for the coming year.

Your engagement to our pastor terminated with the year 1871, and, unfortunately, we have not yet been able to obtain a pastor for the church. We have not, I believe, your money in all the church.

The Church of the Messiah is a Christian church, and the Sunday services are Christian services. We have not, I believe, your money in all the church. We have not, I believe, your money in all the church. We have not, I believe, your money in all the church

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Important Testimony Before the Investigating Committee Yesterday.

Examination of Deputy Collector Clark—Letters from Mr. Fullerton, Merritt and others.

Special Census Bureau Report.

The Investigating Committee were busy yesterday, as the examination of Deputy Collector CLARK, with a view of what is known as "the Secret Service." He then explained in great detail the theory and practice of the system of the collection of revenue for remote years, and of the subject of government spies for investigation. He showed substantially that so far as the Custom-house is concerned the system is a practical nullity, inasmuch as there is any value in secret service, the operations of the Secret Treasury agents. He disclosed no such abuses but the special agents will be had should be called upon to explain some statements which have been made by merchants. Mr. CLARK stated the facts as he knew them by the officers of the Government, by various agents of whom, in the merchants concerned have already told their stories to the Committee. And in stating, in all other respects, he defended the Department on this side of the story. Then, in the case of HERRIMAN & PATSON, it appeared that the Collector, finding what he considered a serious fraud, submitted the book to the District-Attorney, and that the latter, after some further investigation, made at the request of the Collector, intimated that the Government could not probably succeed in forfeiting the goods, yet the claim to the unpaid duties remains still unsettled—the officers of the Government contending that a considerable sum remains still due, and the importers mainly denying it. As to remote time, it appears that there was more than one offer to return money, on their stipulation, to prevent them in court, or at their certifying copies to be sworn. As to WEEDEN'S case, it appears that he detailed on the proceedings in Court, and that judgment was obtained for the full amount claimed by the Government, and Mr. WEEDEN paid its amount. [illegible] Not much of a "compromise." The Committee adjourned during Mr. CLARK'S examination unfinished. There was but one overflow of Democratic tribunitism in the day.

The session opened with the reading of the following letter:

[illegible] Jan. 13, 1872.

[illegible] Sir: I have something which, if shown up, will do much to relief against the late Collector of Brooklyn, which is an act of action, not words, and of which I will tell you one, which I have seen in the case of Mr. MURRAY and the operations that was to prevent it, if that Collector had been honest. It also shows, I will so doubt, future Mr. Secretary, that it is a fact beyond that of Mr. Evarts, as it appears, that there is a set of men in New-York, with a view to bid a number of Congressmen, who, with a view to bid a number of Congressmen, gentlemen, what will you give to have this shown to Congress? It is important to the people. Respectfully yours, W. A. F. [illegible] Sir: I have difference in the duties performed by these gentlemen. I specifically state they have the same duties and powers, but there is a division of labor, I suppose.

Q—At times they can all have and there is none of them in the office? A—Possibly; they are somewhere hunting at some parcels of the same than others.

Q—Are there any persons who make affidavits? A—Yes.

Q—Do you know what Brown's occupation was before he became a Treasury agent? A—Not I know; BRICKETT was previously inspector of Customs, Captain of Police, and I believe Brown was.

Q—Then was the CLARKE'S connection previously? A—He was in the Custom-house.

Q—Do you know of Mr. BRADBURY having made any affidavits as to entry of goods, merchandise? A—I don't remember.

Q—Is he an active man in the service? A—Yes.

Q—I suppose it is quite probable he has made affidavits? A—I think of a mistake and he is generally looking after smuggling.

Q—Has he any special qualifications for the [illegible] of merchandise from his previous life? A—I don't know.

Q—What was Brown's occupation before he became Treasury agent? A—He was in some business of a mercantile nature.

Q—Had he any knowledge of commerce in such a port as this? A—That is my impression from my acquaintance with him; I cannot say from the statute; I could not tell you what was Mr. ALEXANDER's business before that; Mr. HOWE has been Treasury agent since April, 1869. He was previously [illegible], I think, in connection with the scale manufactory, and was a Government agent in Massachusetts during the war.

Q—The understanding of merchandise constitutes a large portion of the business in that bureau; does it not? A—It forms a large portion of the fraud upon the revenue.

Q—I speak of Mr. HOWE's bureau? A—The business of his bureau is made up of frauds upon the revenue and the investigation of such other matters as are assigned to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I think, also, a general supervision and inspection of the various Custom matters within his district. If there are any complaints relating to the Collector's office they are referred to him for examination and report. His entire business is not the investigation of frauds against the revenue.

Q—It is a great part of them, is it not? A—I believe so.

Q—You understand from your knowledge and experience, that the frauds upon the revenue constitute the majority of the business of that bureau? A—I would say it constitutes a considerable portion of the business of that bureau, but I would not say it was the largest part.

Q—The cases of undervaluation constitute the largest portion of cases upon the revenue? A—No, Sir; they constitute a large part of the frauds that have been investigated and discovered. They are not the large majority by any means.

Q—What class of cases, if any, form the majority of cases of fraud upon the revenue? A—I should say that the frauds discovered by means of false weights constitute a large part.

Q—When you say so large a part what do you mean, the number of cases or in the amount involved? A—I cannot say exactly, but I think it is in both cases. I think more fraud is committed by undervaluation than by any other cause.

Q—Cases of undervaluation abound in questions of a peculiar character, do they not? A—Yes, Sir; where they involve a question of value, they do.

Q—When an invoice is presented, which afterward turns out to be false, the person who inspects it will have his attention attracted to the prices specified in the invoice as not according to his experience in the business? A—You are referring to persons generally?

Q—As a general proposition? A—Yes Sir.

Q—Is other than his experience as to value form a very important guide to the officer who first takes it upon the case of an invoice or fraudulent reduction? A—You are placing the case of an officer starting out to investigate a particular series of invoices, to ascertain whether there is any fraudulent entry made, by a reduction of market value.

Q—No. What I want to ascertain simply is this: Is it necessary that the officer should possess some knowledge of the values of the merchandise? A—I don't regard it as essential by any means.

Q—Why should the invoice attract attention if it varied from the prices given in it unless he knew whether the prices were reasonable or not? A—He is generally put in the position of a jury passing upon evidence.

Q—Do I understand you to say that when he is examining a case of dry goods that it makes no difference whether he knows their value or not? A—The Examiner should be sole or judge of the value of the goods; the question of smuggling is generally determined by extrinsic evidence.

Q—When a man who knows nothing of dry goods takes up an invoice, his suspicion are he aroused; is he as competent as a Treasury agent who is man who is acquainted with the value of these goods? A—I think there is no difference; I think he is quite as competent.

Q—You think a man who does not know anything concerning these goods is just as well able to make an affidavit as one who is acquainted with them? A—Sometimes one may make affidavit without being acquainted with the subject; dry goods are generally described in the invoice, and their values are pretty well known; I think a lawyer accustomed to judge of evidence, accustomed to judge of its force—would be better qualified to act as Treasury agent than a Jew peddler; I think he is unfit to consider the direct and bearing of the evidence.

Q—How many good lawyers are there Treasury agents? A—I don't know that any of them have been trained as lawyers.

Senator Frait—What precautions are taken against imposition upon the minds of an importer of dry goods, who is seized, and experts are called to examine them? A—They call in persons who are believed to be trustworthy.

Q—Have they been sworn? A—There is no authority to do so; as far as I am concerned I never heard of a complaint of that kind.

Senator Casserly—But they have the opportunity of passing upon the affidavits of firm? A—Yes. But they are very careful in their selection. On one occasion, at Mr. HOWE's request, I sent a clerk of mine to assist in the examination of the books of NAYLOR & Co., but on its being ascertained he was a relative of a member of the firm, he was withdrawn.

Q—What length of time is generally occupied in examining the books and papers in a case of seizure? A—That must vary with each case. The majority of the books are usually returned in a few days.

Q—In the mean time has the merchant access to his books for the purpose of carrying on his business? A—Always.

Q—Is not the whole matter in the charge of JUDGE? Has not the merchant the power to obtain an order for their possession? A—Yes; but in these cases certified copies have been taken.

Q—Are them Treasury agents salaried officers? A—Yes.

Q—How many clerks has he? A—I don't know he is allowed any. He is appointed by Secretary ROBESON.

Q—When the books are placed in the custody of the Treasury agent, what is to prevent his opening them? A—If it came to the knowledge of the Collector that they were opening the books, they would be immediately recalled.

Q—In examining these books and papers, do you confine yourself to the specific charge in the affidavit? A—All other impositions in regard to the same class of goods.

Q—Do you mean to say that new claims have not been made founded on facts obtained on the basis of facts obtained from books and papers which were seized? A—There might have been instances of that kind; in fact, I know there have been.

Q—Are not the merchants' books open for the discovery of any possible fraud which may exist? A—Only in relation to the fraud described in the affidavit generally.

Q—You have known where a compromise has been made by the Government for matters wholly disconnected with the charges embodied in the affidavit? A—I don't remember any such case.

Senator Bayard—I may say I have evidence of such a fact.

Mr. Clark—I have no information concerning it.

Senator Bayard—You say they don't make charges against them and effect compromises upon information; that they find out until they get the terms settled a different product? A—I have no recollection of any case where the officer was interested in the fraud over levying on which a new claim was made.

Q—Do not the Treasury agents sometimes make fees made through your bureau to a merchant upon other charges than those specified in the affidavit? A—There is assuming that confidences and compromises have been made through my bureau.

Q—Then you say that fees are made through your bureau? A—None are made through my bureau; no cases are settled there.

Q—Are settlements made anywhere for charges not specified in the warrant for which the papers and books are brought into custody? A—I don't know; but where there have been such claims where charges have failed, there has been one class of goods, and examination of the books disclosed that in another class of goods a fraud was also committed, that might have been embraced in the suits subsequently brought.

Q—Are the merchants' books not thrown open to the officers of the Treasury, and I ask you if a man's books are taken in to a branch, and whether the information thus acquired may not be used against him? A—I have no knowledge in any case that it is the connection in relation to the matter; it should seem an improper thing if such were the case, and unauthorized.

Q—Do you know of any case where they were brought to the Custom-house against a man? A—No, Sir.

Q—Do you know of cases where books have been taken from the Merchant? A—I do not know.

Q—Have you a general impression of what ordinarily books and papers? A—I have. Where they have been delivered to the Collector.

Q—I will ask you to give us the list of the estimate, the source, the character of the seizure, character, &c.? A—I think it will be best to ascertained, in some instances, from the District-Attorney. Most I will supply the books, if you give me a list of those you require.

Senator Casserly—Do you wish to state any one reason Mr. Hunter in the House urged, who had previous to his appointment as Treasury agent, been in a considerable business? A—I do not recollect the subject. The duties of the inspectors are to make seizures, searches of the vessel, &c.

Q—Like the Treasury agents, they have a good deal of business inside and outside? A—I presume so.

Q—Is it not possible that examinations of merchants' books and affidavit any sworn statement being presented? A—My knowledge is that they are always conducted by a sworn officer of the Government. Sometimes books in German and French are submitted for translation to some officer.

Q—Do you know the amounts of money received by Mr. HOWE for seizures and forfeitures? A—I have only a general idea; the books of the Auditor's office will show.

Q—State whether the amount received is large or small? A—I could not state with any accuracy whether the gross receipts were $50,000 or $100,000.

Senator Casserly—Do you mean to say it was limited to $50,000 or $100,000? A—I don't think it has amounted to $50,000.

Q—For how many years? A—Since the bureau was established.

Q—How long ago is that? A—Eighteen months ago.

Q—Who pays the expenses of the office [illegible]? A—I understand that it is paid by some appropriation of the Treasury.

Q—You said you did not know of any case in which invoices other than those specified and limited in the warrant and approved, have been made the basis of new charges against the merchant? A—No; I know of no such fact.

Q—Have I known of cases in which additional invoices had been the basis in which suits were brought, the charges being of the same general nature. If a clear case of fraud of any nature was discovered through the course of examination, process based on the evidence was commenced if it was brought to the notice of the Collector. I had official notice of the case of NAYLOR & Co.

Q—Is that case the District-Attorney directed the discontinuance of the suits brought on the affidavit, but on new invoices he proceeded new claims on new evidence, and commenced suits against the merchants? A—The claim was made on the facts adduced subsequently. The claim was made at Mr. HOWE's office, and, as I understand the statement of the District-Attorney, there was a good deal of discussion between the representatives of NAYLOR & Co., subsequently dismissed him from that opinion.

Q—Were those invoices on which the proceedings were made included in the affidavit? A—I believe so.

Senator Casserly—He believe there was a great abuse of power with those officers. They did not limit themselves to the subject-matter specified in the affidavit but overhauled everything they could get into their hands. They made a general dissquisition of the man's papers and business.

Senator Frait—I was unsophisticated enough to suppose that in the examination they were entitled to bring these matters under the attention of the District-Attorney.

Senator Casserly—I submit the entire proceedings should be embraced in the affidavit. If we were living in an absolute monarchy this thing would be permissible. In a free government it should not be tolerated.

Senator Frait—Have complaints based on evidence derived from seizures been sustained as a general thing? A—A large majority of them.

Q—What number of that class of cases have been compromised or settled? A—A very considerable portion of them.

Senator Frait—Do you know of any case where, under these circumstances, frauds has been discovered and the man was released? A—There was one case of that character; none my connection with the port, but even then it was thought it under the advice of the District-Attorney. In all cases proceedings have been commenced.

Q—Who are the parties to a compromise? A—The District-Attorney and the heads of the Treasury.

Q—Have you a record of each in which money has been paid? A—No money is paid in my hands; it is paid to the cashier of the Court, and then to the Collector, who deposits it to the credit of the Government; a duplicate copy of the record of the Court is sent to the Collector; these show the gross amounts paid and the deductions made for all sources; it also shows the amount accruing to the United States; there is also an account of the amount paid informers, &c.

Senator Frait—Is it a fact that it is Treasury policy to make new claims against the merchant upon other charges than those specified in the affidavit? A—There is assuming that confidences and compromises have been made through my bureau.

Senator Bayard—I think we should have the names of all persons who have Government money in their possession. I have grieved over the existence of informers in past years. They are a race of people not very honorable to the community in which they are tolerated.

Witness continued—I have known cases where goods have been seized and their value in money paid into the Court. The money is then liable to condemnation. I don't know of any case where a merchant paid money and got a free permit to go to the store and get those goods.

Q—The understanding is that in case of a compromise, no further proceeding will be instituted, and he will be exempt from punishment? A—That is the understanding.

Q—You have never known that violated? A—No, Sir.

Q—One-half of the amount goes to the United States, one-fourth to the informer, and the remainder to the Collector and Naval Officer, apart from those, do you know other distributions directed by law? A—No. The informer is adjudged by the Judge or Secretary of the Treasury. The sureties mentioned in the record is not a way recognized as the informer, and I have frequently seen a different state of things established.

Q—In regard to the bonds given to the sureties, have you not, by an arrangement, received compensation from them of the amount they have paid? A—There have been cases in which the Collector has received the money in the Court? A—There is a record in the proceedings in the department. I have more or less received in relation to them all.

By Senator Casserly—You have mentioned what is called in Mr. Howe's office as some officials; are there some other persons connected with it? A—Not of my knowledge.

Q—Are there any informers? A—I do not know of any of course in particular cases as has particular agents.

Q—How do you understand that those in such cases are employed? A—Under the Treasury agents?

Q—Are these informers known to the Treasury agents so that they can say their name, or call them whenever they want them? A—I can't say so.

Q—Are the proceedings in Mr. FAYNE's office in the Custom-house substantially the same as in Mr. HOWE's with regard to the custody of books and papers? A—I never knew him to sell in the old of more than one person—he was in the capacity of clerk, and was subsequently made a sworn officer of the Customs.

Q—In what custody are the books and papers which interest to Mr. FAYNE? A—They are in the Collector's custody as much as if he retained them.

Q—The Collector did not appoint Mr. FAYNE and cannot direct him as to the conditions he should receive [illegible] A—No, but we ask those questions in regard to papers.

Q—That is, he has the custody of them? A—No, he retained to have the real custody of them upon which Mr. FAYNE had the mere custody of them.

Q—Does Mr. FAYNE have the key of the room in which the papers are kept? A—He has one key, the Collector another, the [illegible] another.

Q—Do you know of the custody of papers in a great number of cases? A—I have heard of it before my connection with the Custom-house; I know that experts were employed in the sheep wine case, but I do not know that Stokes or gold-lace boots were employed for that purpose.

Senator Casserly—You were asked if secrets of business had been disclosed to persons in the Treasury Department and to the Collector; I have seen such books and papers? A—Yes, Sir; I have seen such books and papers; I have [illegible] and they would not be likely to reveal it.

Senator Howe—After the seizure of books and paper, show is the compromise to be carried out? It is carried in a great many ways. Suppose a merchant comes to the Collector and says, I come to the compromise is not attempted until the counsel of the parties come at the Collector's office and if the case is tenable. Their action is governed accordingly. In going to find the proportions of authority made to the District-Attorney and all the preliminaries to a settlement are made by him.

Q—Putting as a matter of this kind, then, you are as the any other matter of business? A—Yes, Sir.

Q—Who fixes the compromise in the case? A—There must be the concurrence without the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Collector, the Naval Officer, and the District-Attorney? A—Evidence presented by the counsel, but is required further.

Q—Have you ever known a compromise that was not agreed to by the District-Attorney? A—I do not recollect one well.

Q—Where there is no suit in office of the Government in which proceedings; criminal action is entirely within the province of the District-Attorney; the regulations of the department in all doubtful cases requires the Collector to obtain the opinion of the District-Attorney and it is the opinion of the latter that generally prevails.

Q—Are you familiar with the management of criminal cases in this particular—who directs the discontinuance of criminal proceedings? A—The District-Attorney, with or without the consent of the Custom-house authorities.

Q—I rather from the letters between the Collector and the District-Attorney, in his view, that the Collector was of opinion the cargoes were liable to forfeiture, but upon the examination of the District-Attorney the case of forfeiture could not be made out? A—Upon the statement which he received he could not prosecute a case which should be prosecuted, but the subsequent explanation rendered it doubtful, and he sustained the opinion of the District-Attorney in the matter.

The following correspondence was then read:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW-YORK,
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, May 4, 1871.

Sir: On the 24th ult. I received from Messrs. HERRIMAN & PATSON, firm business at No. 64 Pine-street, in this city, entered certain wool imported by them in the last preceding month, which, from the invoice, I find, entry being dated at 40,000 pounds, the weight of this wool is stated by the United States weighter, by which there appeared to be 44,000 pounds, but the quantity of wool actually received, as shown by the United States weighter, was 44,000 pounds. The second invoice would appear to have been without any authority, and I have ascertained from the examination of facts that this wool was not weighed at all by a United States weighter, but that it was removed from the dock and received by HERRIMAN & PATSON with full weight, as stated in the first invoice. Upon the United States weighter, Mr. DIXON, being called upon, he stated that he had never weighed the wool, and that he had never received any such quantity of wool, and that at that time only said wool had received and weighed 4,000 pounds; that the entire quantity of this description is but 4,000 pounds per bale; that no bale could be weighed by the weighers, and that the remainder of the wool was received and weighed at a time and place, and in a manner, and in quantities of much more than two pounds per bale; that the 2,000 pounds per bale, as stated, was made on entry of wool by the bank for Adler, which was invoiced and entered as weighing 188,000 pounds, which was returned by the United States weigher, as 188,000 pounds, and by Messrs. HERRIMAN & PATSON, as 188,000 pounds, and entered accordingly. Subsequent investigation has disclosed that this wool, by similar proceedings, never passed through the City weighers, but, if entered, was never weighed by the United States weighers; that the weight stated by the Collector, of 188,000 pounds, and their sales, wants was 188,000 pounds.

The invoices value of these two importations of wool is $[illegible] If, upon proper notice, make the Bank and Messrs. HERRIMAN & PATSON, I will be obliged to request that you will institute proceedings, in accordance, based for a sufficient amount to recover the value of this wool in currency, under section 4 of the act of March 2, 1867, in that the information received, that wool knowing it to have been illegally imported, and with the intent to defraud the revenue, by their procurement, was taken from the weighers in order to ascertain the duties thereon, in violation of section 17 of the act of March 2, 1867. In your opinion the facts will warrant the institution of such proceedings.

The invoices, entries, returns, fraudulent dock-books, and evidences from the books and papers of Messrs. HERRIMAN & PATSON, together with the names of the witnesses, will be forwarded to you when requested. The annexed schedule gives the particulars of the before-mentioned weights.

Respectfully, &c.
(Signed) THOMAS MURPHY, Collector.
Hon. NOAH DAVIS, United States Attorney.

Date of Entry.	Invoiced and Rec'd.	U. S. weight.	City weight.	Entered wgh't. returns.	Sales return.	Sales weight.
Hans George, Bank	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Des Adler,	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

OFFICE OF THE DISTRICT-ATTORNEY OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DIST. OF NEW-YORK, No. 11 WALL-STREET, May 6, 1871.

Hon. Thomas Murphy, Collector, &c.:

Sir: Referring to your letter of May 4, 1871, relative to the importation of wool by HERRIMAN & PATSON, to recover the value of certain wool alleged to have been fraudulently entered by them, I do not (for my opinion) that I shall warrant the institution of such proceedings. I have respectfully to note that in my judgment, the facts stated do not appear to be strong prima facie case against these parties, which, standing unexplained and unrebutted, would, within the meaning of section 4 of the act of March 2, 1867, in the Weld case, entitle the Government to a verdict. But a further inquiry into the merits of the case, and the facts as they are about to be by counsel, Hiram Ketchum, Esq., made, leads me to the belief that the Government would fail in the suit if the defendants succeeded before a jury in the state of facts alleged by them. Under the circumstances, I think it my duty to refrain from commencing a criminal suit, and to rely upon the civil remedy, which, I think, will be sufficiently effective upon your judgment as to the liability of the defendants for the value.

I am, very respectfully,
(Signed) NOAH DAVIS,
United States Attorney.

Q—The District-Attorney, upon the consideration, that it would not be advisable to proceed against them for the value of the wool? A—Yes, Sir. Proceedings were commenced against the parties on the 7th May, a warrant was obtained and executed. All the books and papers were returned on May 8 except four, and these were retained until after the entry of the District Attorney; I do not remember that Mr. FAYNE formerly made application to me, but he consented. It was on a consideration of the whole circumstances and a consultation with the parties that the District-Attorney came to the conclusion to which he arrived.

Senator Casserly called attention to the fact that Mr. JAYNE had made a statement in a loud and emphatic voice, which was altogether improper and irrelevant. He had not criticised any statement made during the session, but he considered the improper, as having a bearing upon the testimony of the witness.

Q—Do you understand this controversy as finally closed? A—I don't know anything to the once we think it will be renewed.

A—It was complained by Mr. FAYNE that you accused his house of fraud? A—There papers being shown to me I said, more was either fraud or gross neglect; that was my said to Mr. FAYNE.

Q—Did you state that any attempt was made to bribe some of your subordinates, A—No, Sir.

Q—The case as I understand was terminated only by the entry of judgment in the Government's favor for the amount claimed? A—Yes; the whole amount of the claim was paid.

As the hour of the prosecution the investigation adjourned to Monday morning at 11 o'clock.

Gas on the Manhattan Blue Guarantee.

From the Tribune City Intelligence, Jan. 8.

A gentleman is now in this city who was one of the original and charter Mormons that settled. He left a good position as bookkeeper in a New-York business house, and with his wife went to the "land of promise," returned by the agents of the proselyting company. He says the half of the rascalities of the company have never been told. The loss and short of the speculation with him is that he lost everything he possessed in the world. They first left taking trunks and other baggage, then, finally, during their long journey on foot, they threw away the little articles they carried in their hands. In San Francisco he could find no employment, and, being advised to do so, came to this place, where he has had the same luck. He is a good book-keeper, speaks five languages, has conducted business in three, and with all these accomplishments he has not been able to get work at even the lowest wages. As he is dead-broke, he says he will work for board and lodging until he can do better. He is a graduate of a mountain college in Europe, and says if he cannot give satisfaction he wants no place for a single day.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

[illegible]

STOCK EXCHANGE.

[illegible]

SECOND BOARD.

[illegible]

SATURDAY, Jan. 13—P. M.

The Bank return shows a very large accession to the Deposit line since last Monday. The average of the week is $5,005,800 higher. Of this sum $2,067,500 is in Gold backs. The Loans are increased $3,538,800. The Gold Notes are $637,700 less than on previous report and Circulation is down $62,900. The Treasury Office during the week received in Gold Customs $2,658,127, and paid out Gold Interest $2,835,311.

Money closed at 7 ₱ cent. to the Stock Brokers on a better demand than on Friday, owing to the activity and continued advance in Stocks.

Gold manifested some firmness up to 2 o'clock today as 109 @ 109⅛ ₱ cent., but the demand fell off later in the day and the market closed 109 @ 109⅛ ₱ cent. dull. Exchange on London steady at 109½ ₱ cent. sales.

The Stock Exchange continued active and on the advance, and a very large business was done in the Railroads as well in the Hall of the Exchange as at the Boards. The Western Telegraph and the Express Stocks were also in demand at advancing rates. A feature in the Railroad Stocks was a strong movement in New-York Central. The purchases were unusually heavy, and by or for account of leading Brokers. The North-west, Lake Shore, Rock Island and Union Pacific were also strong and in large demand. The general advance extended to New-Jersey Central and Delaware and Lackawanna, ex January Dividend. Erie was partially better than on Friday, when 33,000 shares were sold at 34 @ 35¼ ₱ cent., but there is no such general disposition to speculate in the Stock as noticed early in the week. The Public Funds left off firm on the 5-20s of 1865-67, January and July, and steady on other descriptions. The First Mortgages of the Union Pacific advanced, on European orders, to 93¾ @ 93¾ @ 93¾ ₱ cent. The Land Grants and Incomes of the same Company were in demand, the former selling at 93¾ ₱ cent. The Central Pacifics steady at 103¾ @ 103¾ ₱ cent.

After the Boards the following quotations were made, as compared with Friday night:

CLOSING PRICES—JAN. 13.

	Friday.	Saturday.
United States New 5s	109¾	109¾
U. S. 5-20s, '65, May and Nov.	111¼	111¼
U. S. 5-20s, '67, Jan. and July	111¾	112
American Gold	109	109⅛
Bills on London, 60 days	109¾	109¾
N. Y. Central and Hudson	96¾	97⅛
N.Y.Cen. and Hud. Debt Ctfs.	92¾	93
Reading	114¾	114¾
Chicago and Rock Island	109¾	110⅛
North-west Common	70¾	71⅛
North-west Preferred	93¾	93¾
Pacific Mail	55⅛	56⅛
St. Paul Common	54¾	55
Ohio and Mississippi	47⅞	47⅞
Toledo and Wabash	74¾	74¾
Western Telegraph	71¾	72⅛
Erie	33¾	34¼
Union Pacific	93¾	93¾
Lake Shore	91¾	91¾
Lake Shore Scrip	88	88⅛

At the very close the market for the New-York and Western Roads was strong and steady.

UNITED STATES TREASURY,
NEW-YORK, Jan. 13, 1872.

Gold receipts	$661,670 42
Gold payments	1,203,336 69
Gold balance	60,714,[illegible]
Currency receipts	726,426 50
Currency payments	326,452 69
Currency balance	$[illegible],614 41
Customs	420,000 00
Cancelled Gold Certificates sent to Washington, D. C.	770,000 00

The following are the last prices for the various Public Funds of the United States:

[illegible]

The last prices for the Miscellaneous Shares dealt in at the Exchange were as follows:

[illegible]

The Manhattan Insurance Company, having filed its declaration and charter in the State Insurance Department, announces that the books of subscription to the capital stock have been opened, at No. 69 Wall-st., and will remain open until further notice.

The visible imports of general merchandise have been to the specie value of $4,682,[illegible].

The San Francisco papers furnish the following statistics of the trade of the port:

EXPORTS OF GOLD.

	Merchandise.	Treasure.	Total.
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

The exports of merchandise and treasure for the past six years have been in the aggregate as follows:

	1866.	1867.	1868.
Domestic produce exported	$8,767,[illegible]	$11,[illegible]	$11,[illegible]
Foreign goods shipped to Mexico	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Treasure	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Totals for each year	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

	1867.	1868.
Domestic produce exported	$14,[illegible]	$11,[illegible]
Foreign goods shipped to Mexico	[illegible]	[illegible]
Treasure	[illegible]	[illegible]
Totals for each year	[illegible]	[illegible]

	1869.	1870.
Domestic produce exported	[illegible]	[illegible]
Foreign goods shipped to Mexico	[illegible]	[illegible]
Treasure	[illegible]	[illegible]
Totals for each year	[illegible]	[illegible]

	1871.
Domestic produce exported	[illegible]
Foreign goods shipped to Mexico	[illegible]
Treasure	[illegible]
Total for year	[illegible]

The receipts of duties at this port for several years have been as follows, showing a considerable reduction from the year of 1869:

	1869.	1870.	1871.	1872.
Jan.	$[illegible]	$[illegible]	$[illegible]	$[illegible]
Feb.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
March	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
April	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
May	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
June	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
July	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Aug.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Sept.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Oct.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Nov.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Dec.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	$[illegible]	$[illegible]	$[illegible]	$[illegible]

The total for 1868 was $[illegible]
The total for 1867 was $[illegible]
The total for 1866 was $[illegible]
The total for 1865 was $[illegible]
The total for 1864 was $[illegible]
The total for 1863 was $[illegible]

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS,
BEARING EIGHT PER CENT (8 P. C.) INTEREST.
PAYABLE IN GOLD,
FREE OF TAX,
AND IN DENOMINATIONS OF $1,000, $500 AND $100, can be obtained from the undersigned, or through the principal banks and bankers throughout the United States.

The attractive features of these securities are recognized in the fact that, although they have been but a short time on the market, they are nearly all absorbed, and but a small amount are now for sale.

They combine a perfect security with a liberal rate of interest. This interest account is made light for, and easily borne by, the Company, through the operation of the Sinking Fund created from sales of the Company's land, which, in many cases, draw interest at the rate of ten (10) per cent. per annum. The security behind them is ample in every particular, as they constitute a first and only mortgage of a trunk line of railroad which will soon connect the City of St. Joseph, Mo., (an important railway centre,) with the Union Pacific Railroad at Fort Kearney, materially shortening the distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In addition to this, the bonds have further security in the fact that there is included in the Mortgage the Company's magnificent Lands, amounting to 1,600,000 acres, known to be among the best in the United States. The Mortgage indenture provides the sale of these Lands at less than Four Dollars per acre, and payable to the Trustees under the Mortgage, for the clear and express purpose of retiring these Bonds. The amount thus realized exceeds the entire amount of bonds which can be issued, and leaves the road, property and franchises free.

The Bonds have thirty years to run, with interest at Eight per Cent., free of tax, payable in February and August in each year.

Both principal and interest are payable in gold.

The principal in New-York. The interest in either New-York, London or Frankfort-on-the-Main, at the option of the holder, without notice, and in the gold currency of the country in which they are presented. They are coupons or registered.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The present price of these Bonds is 97½ and accrued interest in currency, from Aug. 15, 1871. But they are receivable at par and accrued interest in payment for lands sold by the Company. The right is reserved to advance the present selling price without notice.

Maps, circulars, documents and full information furnished on application.

Though asking no agents for the sale of this loan, our firm buy and sell in their regular business the Bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, those of the Eastern Division eight per cent (8s) recently placed by us at 97½, being now quoted at from 101½ to 102½ and accrued interest.

TANNER & CO.,
Bankers, No. 11 Wall-st.

WEST WISCONSIN LAND GRANT SINKING FUND SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS for sale at 90 and interest in currency. Investors who wish a perfectly safe bond on a finished road can obtain full particulars by applying to WHITE, MORRIS & CO., No. 15 Wall-street, and GWYNNE, JOHNSON & DAY, No. 16 Wall-street.

LAW REPORTS.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS—JAN. 13.

By Judge Barrett.

Little ex. Milburn; order granted.

Acker et al. ex. Colima, Jr., et al.; judgment granted.

In the matter of the petition of the New-York Life Insurance and Trust Company; reply confirmed and order granted.

In the matter of the application of Charles A. Buddenick, &c.; notice of application must be given to the Superintendent of Buildings.

Leuchtes vs. Schingel, &c.; memorands for counsel.

In re habeas corpus of Michael J. McCarthy; writ discharged and prisoner remanded.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM—JAN. 13.

By Chief-Justice Barbour.

Bly vs. The Solar Chemical Manufacturing Company; motion to vacate attachment granted.

The Ocean Bank vs. The New-York Printing Company; motion to stay execution denied.

Rose vs. The Bartlett Reversible Sewing-machine Company; motion granted.

COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM—JAN. 13.

By Judge Loew.

In the matter of Gustav B. Sangmeister; order to the commission issue granted.

Herman vs. Levy; motion to open default granted upon the conditions specified in the memorandum for counsel.

Bang vs. Conant; motion granted.

Calef vs. Reed; motion granted.

BROOKLYN CITY COURT—IN EQUITY.

By Judge Nelson.

THE STREET CASES—THE INJUNCTIONS DENIED.

George B. Elkins vs. The City of Brooklyn, the Commissioners of the Water Board, &c.—In this case the plaintiff, the owner of land on several specified streets where sewers are being constructed, anticipating that he will be assessed to the extent of $10,000, held up that the streets have never been opened, that the sewers are not constructed pursuant to authority, and that the City and the Commissioners be enjoined from proceeding the work and from making assessments.

Charles Wilson vs. The City of Brooklyn, the Commissioners of the Water Board, &c.—The plaintiff, one of the 111 owners of land on Fourth-street, now being repaved, with wooden block pavement, sets up that the improvement has not been applied for by a majority of the owners; that, though the petition purports to be signed by a majority of such owners, several of the names subscribed were forgeries, and that, for want of the petition required by statute, the defendants have no authority to repave the street. The plaintiff anticipates that an assessment will be laid and so a cloud on his title, and seeks to have enjoinment restrained and the contract declared void.

John H. Bergen, for plaintiff, entered his case by a review of all the cases.

Mr. DeWitt, counsel for the city, and Mr. Emmet for the Water-Board Commissioners, resisted the applications.

Judge NELSON denied the injunction in each case, holding that a Court of Equity had no power to interfere upon the facts stated, and in mere anticipation of a loss, which might, if it ever took effect, be injurious to the owners of the property.

Daniel Morrison vs. John Beaver; case tried without a jury. A great number of witnesses were examined. The plaintiff's property, occupied by tenants, is adjacent to the defendant's. The defendant brings to his place from 150 to 200 sheep, lambs and calves nightly, and slaughters them daily. The noise and the noisome effluvia disturb the comfort of the households, giving rise to the complaint, which, it is said, though somewhat of the defendant's witnesses recognize nothing unpleasant. Judge NELSON decided that defendant's business was a nuisance, and granted an injunction and judgment for the relief claimed.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

No. 289.—Carroll, Administrator, vs. The United States.—Appeal from the Court of Claims.—This cause was submitted on the printed points. The action was to recover cotton seized by the Government during the war. Carroll, the original owner, died before it was taken, and his wife claims that she is entitled to the proceeds. The question of loyalty was the main one, and the evidence showed that while the deceased never gave material aid to the enemy, he did sympathize with the rebels. The Court of Claims held that proof of material aid was not necessary, and that if it was, the fact that deceased attempted to go within the rebel lines, with his slaves, on the approach of the Union troops, was sufficient evidence, for absolutely and unqualified comfort to the rebellion. It was also held that the political status of decedent, and not the administratrix, was the subject of inquiry, asserting the doctrine that decedent was the claimant of the proceeds in contemplation of the act of Congress. It is here contended that as the property was seized after the death of Carroll, the title was in the claimant, and not in the decedent; and it is said that the judgment is at variance with the well-known rules of law and violative of well-settled principles of indictment. Mr. B. C. Carmine for claimant; B. H. Bristow for the Government.

No. 18.—The Nicolson Pavement Company vs. Jenkins.—Error to the Circuit Court of California.—The parties respectively claim to have acquired from Nicolson the exclusive right to the patent for the renewed or extended term, in the City of San Francisco. The District Court gives title under an assignment of Nicolson to one Taylor in December, 1864, and nearly four years before the original term for which the patent was gran

DRY GOODS.

ARNOLD, CONSTABLE & CO.

BROADWAY, CORNER 19TH-ST., NEW-YORK.

RICH LACES.

JUST RECEIVED, AN EXTRA FINE SELECTION OF

Real Point, Applique Point, AND BLACK THREAD LACE POINTES AND JACKETS, BLACK THREAD LACE FLOUNCINGS.

ALSO, AN EXTENSIVE STOCK OF NEW AND VARIED DESIGNS IN BLACK THREAD AND GUIPURE TRIMMING LACES, WHICH WE ARE OFFERING AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Housekeeping Goods,

WE ARE OFFERING AN ATTRACTIVE STOCK OF 4-4 FAMILY LINENS, SHEETING LINENS, TABLE DAMASKS, TOWELS AND TOWELINGS, DAMASK TABLE CLOTHS AND NAPKINS, (IN SUITS,) DOILIES, LUNCH CLOTHS, HUCKABACKS, &c.

White Goods

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Blankets and Flannels

OF EVERY GRADE, AND AT VERY LOW PRICES.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., OFFER GREAT BARGAINS IN BLACK GROS GRAIN SILKS, IN ALL THE CELEBRATED AND MANY SEPARATE MAKES, GUARANTEED FOR DURABILITY, AND RANGING IN PRICE FROM $1 25 TO THE HIGHEST MANUFACTURED.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., CALL SPECIAL ATTENTION TO THEIR ELEGANT COLLECTION OF EVENING SILKS, IN NEW AND DELICATE TINTS, IMPORTED EXPRESSLY FOR BALL AND PARTY DRESSES.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., WILL COMMENCE ON MONDAY, JAN. 15, THEIR CLOSING-OUT SALE OF WINTER DRESS MATERIALS, 300 PIECES EMPRESS CLOTHS IN ALL THE FASHIONABLE SHADES, REDUCED FROM $1 75 TO $1 25 PER YARD. OTHER GOODS IN PROPORTION.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., OFFER A LARGE LOT OF 5-8 NAPKINS $1 PER DOZEN. HUCK TOWELS, $1 50 PER DOZEN. SEVERAL BALES OF CRASH, 9 CTS. ALSO, A VERY VARIED STOCK OF BIRTHINGS AND SHEETINGS, AT PACKAGE PRICES.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., HAVE JUST RECEIVED FROM AUCTION CASES 5-4 BARNSLEY DOUBLE DAMASK, 1 PER YARD. 2 CASES 9-4 BARNSLEY SHEETING, 37 CENTS PER YARD. 2 CASES 10-4 BARNSLEY SHEETING, 31 PER YARD.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., WILL OFFER ON MONDAY, JAN. 15, THEIR SPRING IMPORTATION OF SHIRTINGS, SHEETINGS, and NEW DESIGNS IN VERY FINE 8-4 AND 9-4 DOUBLE DAMASKS, AT ATTRACTIVE PRICES.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., HAVE JUST RECEIVED FROM AUCTION SEAL POINT LACE SHAWLS, $20 TO $200; WORTH $30 TO $300. POINT ARIANI SHAWLS, $35 TO $300; WORTH $50 TO $500. POINT APPLIQUE FLOUNCES, $20 PER YARD TO $50; WORTH $35 TO $75. GREAT POINT LACE FLOUNCES, $10 TO $125 PER YARD; WORTH $20 TO $150. GREAT CHANTILLY SACQUES, $20 TO $125; WORTH $75 TO $400.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., OFFER THE BALANCE OF THEIR STOCK OF SABLE, MINK, ALASKA SABLE, BLACK MARTIN, LYNX AND ERMINE MUFFS AND BOAS AT A GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES, TO CLOSE THE SEASON.

JAMES McCREERY & CO., BROADWAY AND 11TH-ST., WILL OFFER ON MONDAY, JAN. 15, IN THEIR LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S FUR DEPARTMENT, WITH GREAT REDUCTION, LADIES' TUCKED YOKE NIGHT-DRESSES, $1 50. LADIES' TUCKED YOKE CHEMISES, $1. LADIES' TUCKED DRAWERS TO MATCH, 50 cents. LADIES' TUCKED SKIRTS, $1. LADIES' TUCKED AND PUFFED BREAKFAST SACQUES, $1. LADIES' CASHMERE MORNING SOCKS, 50. LADIES' FRENCH WOVEN CORSETS, 75 cents UPWARD. LADIES' PANIERS IN ALL THE NEW STYLES. LADIES' CLOTH SACQUES, REDUCED TO $20. LADIES' WALKING SUITS IN SILKS, SATINS, ALPACAS, &c., AT GREATLY-REDUCED PRICES. DINNER, RECEPTION AND BALL DRESSES MADE TO ORDER.

LEASE AND FIXTURES OF OUR LEIGHTS-AVENUE STORE ARE SOLD. WE GIVE POSSESSION SOON. Entire stock being sacrificed. Crowds of women! Large sales! Great is the store! Was ever result so satisfactory to all that came? Large stock! Opportunity to buy Dry Goods at a sacrifice that has never offered in many a year. ENTIRE STOCK FOR SALE AT RETAIL, COMPRISING DRESS GOODS, SHAWLS, Flannels, Table Linens, Towels, Muslins, Sheetings, Blankets, Shawls, Skirts, Cassimeres, Tickings, &c., &c., without the least regard to the cost. We have held a little while in which to convert the stock into money, and we know the quickest way to do this is to make a big sale at the cost. Half of the goods have been sold to our Brooklyn store, and the remainder can trade at whichever place is most convenient.

ONLY ROOM FOR FEW QUOTATIONS.

ALL-WOOL ENGLISH FLANNELS, 12½ cents. YARD-WIDE WAMSUTTA MUSLIN, 12 cents. MUSLINS FOR 6 CENTS, FORMERLY 10 CENTS. THOUSANDS OF OTHER BARGAINS.

FOSTER BROTHERS, 205, 207 5th-av., near 18th-st., and FOSTER BROTHERS, No. 765 Bleecker-st.

MAISON VIEUDELET, NO. 17 CLINTON-PLACE. A large stock of French Corsets, made expressly for this establishment, are offered for sale at greatly reduced prices.

MARBLE MANTELS.

A. SLADER, STEAM MARBLE AND MANTEL Working Works, Nos. 124 and 126 East 27th-st. Marble and Marbleized Mantels, Slabs, marble counters, monuments at prices that defy competition. Marble turning for the trade.

S. SLADER & CO., NO. 928 WEST 34th-st., between Broadway and 6th-av.—Marble and Marbleized Mantels, Monuments, and Headstones, in great variety. Send for catalogue.

FINANCIAL.

8 PER CENT. GOLD

Free of Government Tax.

Interest Payable Quarterly.

First Mortgage Sinking Fund Bonds

ISSUED AND GUARANTEED

ISSUE LIMITED TO $6,000 PER MILE

OF THE

LOGANSPORT, CRAWFORDSVILLE & SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY OF INDIANA,

PRICE 90 AND ACCRUED INTEREST.

FURTHER AND FULL PARTICULARS WITH PAMPHLETS AND MAPS FURNISHED ON APPLICATION.

Jones & Schuyler, NO. 52 PINE-ST., N. Y.

FINANCIAL AGENTS OF THE COMPANY.

Howes & Macy, Bankers, NO. 30 WALL-ST., NEW-YORK,

Offer the same facilities to Depositors as Incorporated Banks, and allow Interest on daily Balances at the rate of Four per Cent.

Collections made on any point at current rates, with immediate returns.

Special attention paid to choice Stock, Bonds, &c., &c., for Investors.

VERMILYE & CO., BANKERS,

16 and 18 Nassau-st., New-York.

DEALERS IN ALL ISSUES OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

BUY AND SELL ON COMMISSION

RAILWAY STOCKS, BONDS AND GOLD.

MAKING LIBERAL ADVANCES

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.

WALKER, ANDREWS & CO., NO. 14 WALL-ST., NEW-YORK.

ANDREWS & CO., NO. 10 PLACE VENDOME, PARIS.

Bonds, stocks and gold bought and sold on commission.

Drafts on Paris issued in sums to suit. Letters negotiated.

Travelers' and Commercial Credits issued.

Exchange, drafts, &c., bought and sold on the UNION BANK OF LONDON.

MANHATTAN FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, NO. 6 WALL-ST.

THE DECLARATION AND CHARTER OF THIS COMPANY, having been filed in the Insurance Department, the public are hereby notified that the books of subscription to the capital stock will be opened THIS DAY, THURSDAY, Jan. 11, 1872, and will remain open until further notice.

HERMAN T. LIVINGSTON, EDGAR W. CROWELL, ANDREW J. SMITH, } Commissioners.

SEVEN (7) PER CENT. TWENTY-YEAR WATER BONDS

FOR SALE.

GEO. K. STETSON, NO. 36 NASSAU-ST.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO., NO. 59 WALL-ST., ISSUE COMMERCIAL and TRAVELERS' CREDITS AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS of the WORLD.

OFFICE OF THE STAR FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, NO. 401 BROADWAY, New-York, Jan. 9, 1872.

AT THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR Directors of this Company, held Jan. 8, 1872, the following gentlemen were duly elected:

LEVI AFGAR,	ZACHARIA JAQUES,
C. H. APPLEGATE,	EUG. KIMBALL,
JAY L. ADAMS,	D. L. MOSES,
FREDERICK H. JOHNSON,	RICHARD C. MILLER,
EBENEZER BRADLEY,	WM. M. OGDEN,
TOM,	JOHN F. TUFTS,
J. E. BARRON,	EDGAR PINCHOT,
ALEX. BONNELLY,	FRANCIS A. RAY,
MARTIN C. BUSH,	D. W. P. RANDOLPH,
ABIJAH CURTIS,	CHAS. B. RICHARD,
CHARLES DENISON,	CHAS. SPEAR,
JOHN A. DEANAGAN,	E. T. TREFZ,
JAMES FLANAGAN,	E. R. THURBER,
DANIEL FOSTER,	JOHN C. TUCKER,
ALLAN HAY,	JAS. WALLACE,
JOHN M. HOLDAHL,	JAS. CORNELL WHITE,

At a subsequent meeting of the Board, held this day, NICHOLAS C. MILLER was unanimously re-elected President, and JOHN B. FLANAGAN Vice-President. JAMES M. HODGES, Secretary.

THE GERMAN-AMERICAN BANK, NEW-YORK, Jan. 8, 1872.

AT AN ELECTION HELD ON SUNDAY, Jan. 7, 1872, the following-named gentlemen were elected Directors of this Bank for the ensuing year, viz.:

CHAUNCEY T. BOWEN,	F. MESCHEDE,
CHARLES SENGER,	HENRY MAGNUS,
MARCELLUS HARTLEY,	FRANCIS MORAN,
JOSHUA HENDRICKS,	EDWARD FRIEBS,
GERHARD JANSEN,	DAVID SALOMON,
FREDERICK KUHNE,	EMIL SAUER.
ALEX. ELINGENBERG,	JOSEPH SELIGMAN,
LEO LEHMANN,	JONAS SONNEBORN,
M. F. ERWIN,	W. G. GRICE,
FREDERICK M. MAAS,	FREDERICK VIERMAN.

And at a meeting of the Board this day, EMIL SAUER was unanimously re-elected President, and DAVID SALOMON was unanimously elected Vice-President. O. H. SCHREINER, Cashier.

THE CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, NEW-YORK, Jan. 10, 1872.

AT THE ANNUAL ELECTION HELD ON Tuesday, Jan. 9, 1872, the following-named gentlemen were elected Directors of this Bank for the ensuing year:

WM. A. THOMSON,	JOHN G. DAVIS,
DUDLEY S. GREGORY,	ROBT. SLEMAN,
JOHN BONT,	HARVEY COLLINS,
PIERRE V. DUPLON,	ROBT. K. DAVIES,
HENRY C. BOGERT,	JESSE W. FOWLER,
PHILIP WILLIMSHAST,	RILEY A. ERICK,
SAMUEL COULTER.

At a meeting of the Board held on Wednesday, inst. last, WM. A. THOMSON was unanimously re-elected President, and JOHN G. DAVIES Vice-President. A. G. AFGAR, Cashier.

OFFICE OF THE EAGLE FIRE COMPANY, NEW-YORK, Jan. 10, 1872.

AT THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR Directors of this Company, held on the 8th inst., the following gentlemen were elected:

Jeremiah Robb,	Philip M. Lydig,
John G. Jones,	Joseph Sampson,
William E. Aspinwall,	William H. Guion,
Robert Roy,	George A. Jones,
Robert Lenox Kennedy,	Jonathan Trowbridge,
Rembrandt Peale,	William B. Astor,
	Henry Meyer.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board SANFORD COBB was unanimously re-elected President.

A. J. CLINTON, Secretary.

UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW-YORK, NO. 73 BROADWAY, CORNER OF BEAVER-ST., NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1872.

AN ELECTION FOR TEN TRUSTEES to serve three years, was held at this office of New-York, of the first class, when, by ballot of the Company, No. 73 Broadway, on TUESDAY, Jan. 16, 1872, between the hours of 12 M. and 1 P. M.

O. T. CARLTON, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE BROADWAY INSURANCE COMPANY, NO. 257 BROADWAY, Jan. 8, 1872.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIRECTORS of this Company will be held at this office, on WEDNESDAY, the 10th inst., Polls open at 12 M., and close at 1 o'clock. JOHN WRAY, Secretary.

FINANCIAL.

FIRST-CLASS CITY AND COUNTY BONDS, PAYING FROM

10 TO 13 PER CENT.,

FREE OF ALL TAXES.

INTEREST COUPONS PROMPTLY PAID SEMI-ANNUALLY IN NEW-YORK.

CHOICE SECURITIES OF UNDOUNTED CHARACTER BELOW PAR.

CASH VALUATION OF PROPERTY,	$39,458,601
BONDED INDEBTEDNESS (LIMITED) ONLY,	1,079,000

ALSO, AN EXTENSIVE VARIETY OF FIRST MORTGAGE 1 AND 2 PER CENT. RAILROAD BONDS, INSURANCE, BANK, GASLIGHT, AND CITY RAILROAD STOCKS, INCLUDING OTHER SECURITIES PAYING FROM 10 TO 30 PER CENT., FOR SAFE AND PROFITABLE INVESTMENTS AT LOW RATES. FOR SALE BY

ALBERT H. NICOLAY, BANKER, STOCKBROKER AND AUCTIONEER, NO. 40 PINE-ST.

N. B.—FIRST-CLASS INVESTMENT SECURITIES PAYING LARGE RATES OF INTEREST. A SPECIALTY WITH THIS HOUSE FOR MANY YEARS.

NATIONAL BROADWAY BANK, NEW-YORK, Jan. 9, 1872.

AT THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR Directors of this Bank, held on the 8th inst., the following-named gentlemen were duly elected for the ensuing year, viz.:

FRANKLIN A. BARNES,	JOSIAH REDD,
JOHN L. HARRIS,	WILLIAM V. HOAG,
WILLIAM M. VEALE,	HENRY L. HOGUET,
FRANCIS R. SCHOALS,	HARRIS HARRIOT,
GEORGE W. SLATT,	JONA W. ALLEN,
JOHN A. LAWRENCE,	NAHUM GULBRAITH,
GEORGE C. RICHARDS,	JOHN G. SCHOLES,
FRANCIS JURNALD,	ANDREW MILLS,
CHAS. BURKHALTER.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board, held yesterday, GEORGE C. RICHARDS was elected President of the said Bank, pro tem.

CHAS. H. LEE, Cashier.

REDEMPTION OF BONDS OF THE WASHINGTON AVE. AND CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.—EXTENSION OF TIME.—Sealed proposals for the sale of bonds to the pro rata sinking fund will be received until noon of Saturday, Jan. 20, 1872. The bonds to be purchased are those of the first mortgage, secured by mortgages on the main line, or some number and value of subsequent issues. The amount to be purchased is about $10,000 this year. The amount to be purchased next year will be the balance of the bonds, secured by mortgages on the main line, or such number and value of subsequent issues as will make the total amount purchased for the two years, $20,000. Bids for the bonds, secured by mortgages on the Wyman Division, will be received for the balance of the sum, $10,000, or any part thereof, not taken on the main line. Proposals should be addressed to the undersigned, and plainly indicate whether the bonds offered are of the mortgages of the Wyman Division. The bonds will be purchased at lowest price will be purchased, and sealed bid Bidders notified without delay.

GEORGE HOWARD, WM. WALTER PHELPS, } Trustees. DEC. 1, 1871. 20 Exchange-place, New-York City.

MONEY TO LOAN ON BOND AND Mortgage upon New-York and Brooklyn improved real estate, in sums of $2,000 and upwards; principals only deal with. Apply to ALBERT H. NICOLAY, No. 40 Pine-st.

RAILROAD BONDS.—WHEREVER YOU MAY BE, if you want to buy or sell, write to CHARLES W. HASSLER, No. 7 Wall-st., New-York.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, NEW-YORK, Jan. 9, 1872. WM. G. GILMAN, No. 54 Pine-st., corner William-st.

DIVIDENDS.

FORTIETH DIVIDEND.

CLINTON FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Office, No. 156 Broadway.

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS HAVE THIS DAY DECLARED A SEMI-ANNUAL DIVIDEND OF TEN PER CENT., PAYABLE ON DEMAND.

JOHN BARRY, Secretary.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1872.

OFFICE OF THE MERCHANTS' INSURANCE COMPANY, No. 149 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, Jan. 3, 1872.

GROSS ASSETS	$499,247 65
CASH CAPITAL	200,000 00
SURPLUS OVER CAPITAL	299,247 65
UNSETTLED LOSSES	16,325 00

The usual Semi-annual Dividend of Ten (10) per Cent. is now payable on demand, free of Government tax. C. P. BAKER, Vice-President.

J. L. DOUGLAS, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA AND READING RAILROAD CO., OFFICE NO. 227 SOUTH 4TH-ST., PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14, 1871.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

The Transfer-books of this Company will be closed on the 20th inst., and reopened on Tuesday, Jan. 2, 1872. A dividend of FIVE PER CENT. has been declared, payable in New-York, on and after the 2d proxo, clear of National and State taxes, payable in cash on and after the 10th of January next, to the holders thereof as may stand registered on the books of the Company at the close of business on the 20th inst. All payable at this office. All orders for dividends must be witnessed and stamped.

S. BRADFORD, Treasurer.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DIVIDEND.

OFFICE OF THE ARCTIC FIRE INSURANCE CO., No. 112 Broadway, NEW-YORK, Jan. 10, 1872.

A Dividend of Five per Cent., free of Government Tax, has this day been declared, payable to stockholders or their legal representatives on demand.

CHAS. HAMBURGH, Secretary.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE NEW RAILWAY COMPANY, CORNER 2ND-AV. AND 42ND-ST., NEW-YORK, Jan. 8, 1872.

DIVIDENDS.—THE DIRECTORS OF THIS Company have declared a Dividend from the earnings of the Road for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1871, of Three and One-half per Cent. on the Preferred Stock.

Payable (free the Government tax) on and after Jan. 15, 1872, at the Treasurer's Office, No. 26 Liberty-st., to the registered holders of stock at the closing of the books.

The transfer-books of the Preferred Stock will be closed Saturday, Dec. 30, 1871, at 3 o'clock P. M., and be reopened on Jan. 11, 1872.

M. N. OTIS, Secretary.

CLEVELAND, COLUMBUS, CINCINNATI AND INDIANAPOLIS RAILWAY COMPANY, CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 3, 1872.

A DIVIDEND OF THREE AND A HALF PER CENT. (FREE OF TAX) ON THE STOCK has been declared by this Company, payable on and after Feb. 1, 1872.

Stockholders registered at New-York will be paid at the United States Trust Company of New-York, No. 45 Wall-st.

The transfer-books will be closed on the evening of Jan. 10, and reopened Feb. 2.

By order of the Board of Directors.

GEO. H. RUSSELL, Treasurer.

FIREMAN'S TRUST INSURANCE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, NO. 62 WALL-ST., NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1872.

AT A MEETING OF THE BOARD OF Directors of this Company held this day, a Semi-annual Dividend of Five (5) per Cent. free of Government tax, was declared payable on demand.

O. D. MILDEBERGER, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE STATE MORTGAGE COAL COMPANY, NO. 111 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, Dec. 23, 1871.

THE DIRECTORS OF THIS COMPANY have this day declared a cash Dividend of FIVE (5) PER CENT., payable on and after Jan. 20, 1872. The transfer-books will be closed from Jan. 10 to the 20th inclusive.

CHARLES RUNTON, Treasurer.

OFFICE OF THE HOPE FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, NO. 42 BROADWAY.

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS HAVE this day declared a Semi-annual Dividend of Five (5) per Cent., free of Government tax, payable on demand.

JAMES R. MOORE, Secretary.

JAN. 11, 1872.

COUPONS NO. 51 OF THE CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY OF IOWA, FIRST MORTGAGE SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS due Jan. 15, 1872, will be paid, free of United States Government Tax, on presentation at the office of the undersigned, at the office of A. L. HATCH, No. 52 Pine-st., N. Y.

C. C. GILMAN, President.

NEW-YORK CITY, Jan. 10, 1872.

OFFICE OF THE ADRIATIC FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, NO. 127 BROADWAY.

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS HAVE this day declared a Dividend of Five (5) per Cent., payable on demand.

CHAS. D. MATTHEWSON, Secretary.

FARMERS' BANK OF KENTUCKY.—DIVIDEND.—The Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, has declared a Semi-annual Dividend of FOUR per Cent., free from Government tax, payable in New-York stockholders at the Bank of America on demand.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TO PROPRIETORS OF PERIODICAL JOURNALS.

A gentleman with twenty years' experience as a Publisher, Author, and Editor, (Phi Beta,) wish to contribute to the editorial columns of a daily or weekly newspaper. He would serve in the capacity of New-York correspondent of some or foreign journals, or would take charge of a literary paper, or a Sunday-school magazine. First-class references and high testimonials. Address JOURNALIST, Newark, N. J., Post-office.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.—I intend a President and Vice-President; the President to hold office for three years; next two years the Vice-President takes his place, the Elected Vice-President every two years; that would make a President acquainted with his office, and keep things from getting out of joint. J. D. F.

A GENTLEMAN GOING THROUGH CHICAGO, WITH HIS WIFE, WOULD LIKE TO MAKE some large orders for a reliable article, selling the remainder, and only two or three customers in each town. Leave cities marked H. G. T., at New-York Times Office.

CITY REAL ESTATE.

FRANCIS TOMES, REAL ESTATE BROKER AND AGENT FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE, NO. 1864 BROADWAY, ONE DOOR NORTH OF 60TH-ST.

Will lease or buy for parties who wish, without charge. Applicants should call.

1872. WARD & GOSDEN, REAL ESTATE BROKERS, UNION-SQUARE, respectfully inform their friends and the public that their

SPRING LIST OF HOUSES FOR SALE AT REDUCED VALUATIONS

is now ready, embracing 300 houses in choice localities, ranging in price from $2,000 to $100,000, to which they invite your early attention.

20th-st., near 2d-av., Gramercy-park.
20th-st., near 2d-av., Gramercy-park.
20th-st., near 2d-av., Gramercy-park.

CITY AFFAIRS.

The Organization of the Aldermen Effected.

Mayor Hall's Opinion of Comptroller Connolly and Ex-Controller Flemkitt.

A New Phase of the Bowling-Brennan Contest—Connolly's Bail—Tweed Still in the City.

Public business was duly yesterday in the City Hall. The Mayor's office was the scene of uninterrupted bustle from the time the Acting Mayor arrived until the place was closed for the day. The truant Mayor proper did not put in an appearance, as it had been hinted he intended to do. It is not unlikely, however, that he will revisit the scene of his "Ring" triumphs to-morrow or on Tuesday, bid them and there that good-bye forever to the chair of the City's Chief Magistrate. In the afternoon, the Aldermen met and elected a clerk in the person of JOSEPH BRANNON, one of the most successful political wire-pullers known to the political history of the Metropolis. Tweed was at his office in Duane-street during the day, and was visited by a large number of his democratic friends of the Incorporated "Ring." It is not likely that he will go to Albany this Winter. Ex-Controller CONNOLLY, the fugitive, continues to lurk in his hiding-place, and where that is, his eye-watching friends decline to make known. Mr. O'CONOR, it is said, has decided to accept the bail offered for CONNOLLY on their formal justification without further objection. Judge BARNARD yesterday denied a motion for a stay of proceedings in the matter of the New-York Printing Company sale, and the sale will, therefore, take place on Tuesday next. The principal points of general bills now before the Legislature for the benefit of the City are given below. Comptroller CHENEY proposes to have the measures acted upon without unnecessary delay.

THE ALDERMEN ORGANIZED.

Sheppard Elected Clerk—Mayor Hall on Connolly and Fleming—Further Efforts to Reduce the Expenses of the Board.

A full meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held yesterday. The room was crowded with spectators. On motion of Mr. COROVEN (Republican) the Board resolved to hold its regular meetings on Mondays, at 1 o'clock, P. M., until otherwise ordered.

Mr. JOYCE, (Reform Democrat,) presented the following preambles and resolutions:

Whereas, The great reform in the municipal affairs of the City, recently inaugurated and now triumphantly completed, was designed to secure a stringent economy and to the benefit of all the people of this municipality, and whereas, notwithstanding the unprecedented and continued reduction of taxes in this City, the expenses of the Board of Aldermen for the year 1871 were about one-third less than the average annual expenses of the Board of Aldermen for the years 1869 and 1870, and the Board of Aldermen, by accepting and acting upon the recommendations of the Committee appointed by the Board of Aldermen, since the organization of the present Board, A. Oakey Hall, Mayor, and the Board of Aldermen, have reduced the expenses of the Board of Aldermen for the year 1872 to the sum of $50,000, and

Whereas, The Board of Assistant Aldermen concur, that this City Council do immediately and urgently request the Legislature of this State, now in session, to enact a special law authorizing and empowering the Mayor, by and with the consent of the Board, to reduce the salaries of the officers and employés of the City, and without the concurrence of the Board of Aldermen, to reduce the compensation to the clerks, mechanics, laborers and others now or recently in the employ, also, to the payment of the claims of all persons now or lately employed by the County authorities.

Mr. COROVEN remarked that the same matter had been made the special order of business in the Assembly for Wednesday next.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK (Reform Democrat) thought the Controller was doing everything in his power to meet the case. He, therefore, moved to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was lost and the resolution was adopted.

This elicited applause from the audience, which was promptly checked by the President, who said that no disorder would be permitted in the room.

Mr. PERCHNEY and two other members of the Board of Assistant Aldermen, appeared before the Board as a Committee, and gave notice that the Board of Assistant Aldermen had regularly organized.

ELECTION OF CLERK.

The Board then proceeded to elect a Clerk.

Mr. VARCE (Rep.) moved that the vote be taken viva voce, which was lost.

Mr. COROVEN said that when he entered the Board he did so for the purpose of assisting in working a reformation. Under a certain understanding he felt justified in announcing that he would cast his vote for JOSEPH SHARPE. (Applause.)

The President—There must be no such manifestation of approval or disapproval, and if it occurs again, the Police have instructions to clear the room.

Mr. FALCONER (Rep.) said he should not vote for Mr. SHARPE. He (SHARPE) was not a reformer, and was not the proper man for the place.

The ballots were then taken, with the following result: JOSEPH SHARPE, 9; WILLIAM CAULDWELL, 4; LEWIS BANDS, 3—necessary to a choice, 8.

JOSEPH SHARPE was thereupon declared duly elected Clerk to the Board.

The Board then, Mr. VARCE in the chair, then went into Committee of the Whole, and considered the report of the Committee on Salaries and employment of the employés of the Board.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK said although the report degraded to cut down the expenses of the Board from over $70,000 to $50,000 per annum, he thought there might be a still further reduction. He thought the office of Assistant Librarian should be abolished, and that the salary of the janitor of the City Library should be reduced from $1,200 to $600.

Mr. COROVEN moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, which was carried.

COMPTROLLER AND FLEMKITT.

The following communication from Mayor HALL was received:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Jan. 4, 1872.

To the Honorable the Common Council:

The paper left by Ex-Comptroller FLEMMING, the oath of office taken by THEO. CONNOLLY before Judge CARDOZO, Jan. 30, 1871, and by Ex-Comptroller FLEMMING before the same judge, on the 1st day of January, as Alderman. He claims to have been elected, but the Mayor remains of opinion that no election for Alderman was held in November, 1870. The Mayor has pointed divers affidavits, affirmations and letters, of whom were elected, in answer and returns with those elected, and if the Mayor is right in his legal opinion, the Comptroller and Ex-Comptroller, if he is legally wrong, then no harm is done. This questioned whether such oath is not void if taken and printed. Nevertheless if an election were valid and duly held, were elected, he has the opinion of the City Attorney, presented by regular his office, and disqualified himself by not observing section 10 of the charter, which reads: That, Every person elected to any office under the City Government shall on or before the ninth day of January next succeeding such election take and subscribe before the Mayor, or any Justice of a Court of Record, an oath or affirmation faithfully to perform the duties of such office, and in case any elected person shall neglect or refuse to take the oath or affirmation aforesaid, on or before the ninth day of January, 1872, two days after the time prescribed by law, the Mayor, Aldermen, by accepting and acting upon the Aldermen as aforesaid, and the Board of Aldermen, since the organization of the present Board, A. Oakey Hall, Mayor, and the Board of Aldermen, have recognized the oath of office, and have received his seat. DESCRIPTS OF MINUTES.

A. OAKEY HALL, Mayor.

JAN. 4, 1872.

A similar communication was also received relative to the seat of Alderman GEORGE W. FLEMKITT.

The communications were referred to the Committee appointed on the protest of JOHN DILLON, who claims to have been elected a member of the Board.

THE CITY'S BANK BILL.

Mr. VARCE (Reform Democrat) presented a communication from the German Savings Bank. The communication states that it has complied with the provisions of an act to incorporate said bank, submitting an substance their statements annual report for the year 1871, as follows: Assets and liabilities, $2,281,097 18, of which $1,127 opened new accounts; paid during the above period to the number of 2,102 $1,000 or less, 25, of depositors closed their accounts. The number of open accounts on Jan. 1, 1872, was 17,452. And the amount received for interest during the year was $60,[illegible] 70, and the amount of interest placed to the credit of depositors, $[illegible] 25. Total amount of the bank, Jan. 1, 1871, $[illegible]; liabilities, $[illegible]; amount of undivided profits, $[illegible]. The report was received and placed on file.

An application from WM. C. BRYANT & CO., asking for appointment as bankers to the Board, was received and referred to the Committee on Banking.

Mr. HOWARD presented LEWIS JACOBS for appointment as Janitor, which was declared out of order.

Messrs. VARCE, GILSEY and MARTIN were appointed a committee to notify the Board of Aldermen that the Board of Aldermen had organized, and was ready to proceed to business. The Board then adjourned.

City Bills Before the Legislature.

Everything is being prepared to have bills passed by the State Legislature, to pay for municipal expenses incurred by the City. One bill provides that the Comptroller shall audit and pay the deficiency of 1871, and all such as he does not act upon for the first thirty days after the passage of the said bill shall be referred to a Board of Auditors, consisting of the active Mayor, the Comptroller, the Commissioner of Public Works and the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Boards of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, who shall if sixty days thereafter, by a vote of a majority, audit, adjust and settle these demands, or reduce or to Co. and report to the Comptroller upon each claim, or demand, so the Comptroller, who shall file the same in his office, and shall pay or cancel such claim, and file the same in the office. Another section provides for levying the Sinking Fund of the City, as established by ordinance of the Common Council, shall remain in full force, until all such debts and liabilities of the City or County, as existing on the 31st day of December, 1871, shall be fully and finally redeemed. Another bill authorizes the Acting Mayor, the Comptroller and Commissioner of Public Works, who hereafter shall appoint, hire and make and file in the Comptroller's office, within ten days after the passage of this act, estimates of the amounts required to defray the expenses of constructing the public buildings of the City and County, in each Department, from Jan. 1 to May 1, 1872, the Comptroller to have the power to limit the sum of these amounts to the purposes designated, and to furnish a statement of the amounts appropriated, and the appropriations to each of these Departments.

FURTHER EXPENDITURES BY COMMISSIONER VAN NORT.

On Friday evening Mr. VAN NORT, Commissioner of Public Works, arrived at his office from Albany, and as he has since been considering the subject of a reduction of the wages now paid to the laborers, carmen, teamsters, and mechanics, employed by this Department in a uniform rate with those paid by the other departments, particularly the Department of Public Parks. In some instances from 10 to twenty-five per cent. more is paid by this Department than by the Department of Public Parks. By this an immediate and large reduction will be made in the City expenses upon the various works upon streets and avenues, and it is believed by this economical reduction a saving to the City of about $150,000 per annum can be realized.

Signing Warrants to Pay Interest on the City Debt—The Powers of the Acting Mayor.

Gen. COCHRANE yesterday signed, as Acting Mayor, warrants for the payment of interest due and other City indebtedness, to the amount of $20,000,000. Pending the signing of the warrants the question was raised by interested parties as to whether the Acting Mayor had authority to sign them during his temporary incumbency of the office; whether, in fact, he could do anything which should bind the City pecuniarily. By many it was maintained that he could not do so, but it was also asserted that the following extract from the laws of 1870, chapter 136, article 3, section 35, clearly gives the Acting Mayor authority to exercise all the powers possessed by the Mayor, except that of appointment to office:

"Whenever the Mayor shall be under impeachment, or there shall be a vacancy in the office of the Mayor, or whenever by sickness, absence from the City, or other cause, he shall be prevented from attending to the duties of his office, the President of the Board of Aldermen shall act as Mayor, and possess all the rights and powers of Mayor, except as herein after provided in regard to appointments to office, during such disability."

Mayor HALL was in the City the whole of yesterday. In the morning he held a long consultation with some of his most intimate friends.

Wagers Japes and Kiser—A New Phase of the Bowling and Brennan Contest.

An interesting topic of conversation in the Sheriff's office, yesterday, was the legal fight between Deputy Sheriff KEISER and Ex-Congressman MORGAN JONES, in the suit against the latter for slander.

Mr. JONES was vigorously hunting up evidence against the character of his opponent, and Mr. KEISER complained that the Police force were being used by Mr. JONES to aid him in the search.

Mr. GEORGE KELLY stated that Sergt. DOUGLASS, of the SIXTH Precinct, wished him to act as a witness, to prove that KEISER had visited California under an assumed name, but Mr. KELLY said he was not prepared to testify to KEISER's good character. The quarrel begins to involve the Brennan and Dowling factions of Tammany Hall. It is understood that the Dowling Association was to meet to denounce KEISER. Sheriff BERRY claims that his supporters have no interest in the question as a party issue. It is certain, however, that sympathy for KEISER as against JONES is strongly and freely expressed by the Brennanites, and the difficulty may culminate in an irreconcilable division between the two factions.

Bail for Connolly.

CONNOLLY's concealment is partially accounted for by the fact that Mr. CHARLES O'CONOR had until yesterday objected to the bail offered. Mr. O'CONOR has now signified his willingness to accept it on their formal justification, without further objection. Mr. CONNOLLY will not, however, place himself within the power of arrest until the whole matter is closed. It is said that he will go where she should cannot arrest him, the Ex-Controller will visit his daughter in this City.

Tweed Still in the City.

TWEED was in his office in Duane-street yesterday. He still refuses to give any indications as to his intentions regarding the Senatorship. During the day he was visited by a large number of his friends.

The Madame Boile—His Account of the Meeting with Mrs. Wilson.

The statement printed in these columns a few days ago to the effect that BOYTE, the murderer of HALSTEAD, was the husband instead of the paramour of the woman WILSON, has caused no little sensation in Newark, and indeed throughout New-Jersey. The murderer has been dictating a story of his life, with a full account of the murder. He relates circumstances connected with first acquaintance with Mrs. WILSON, his marriage to her, and her unfaithfulness to him. In conversation with a reporter yesterday he gave some of the leading incidents of the tale:

"In 1864, BOYTE first met Mrs. WILSON at a disreputable house in Newark. Becoming interested in her, he persuaded her to quit the place in which she was living, and he furnished her with the means of doing so. In the Fall of that year they went together to Paterson to see the races, and on their return Mrs. WILSON said she would "die rather than go to Newark." BOYTE said he would and they drove to Little Falls, where Rev. E. H. LARNON, a Methodist clergyman, performed the ceremony. BOYTE says: "Afterward, she made me promise not to tell any one about it, and that to the reason I did not say anything about it at the trial. She was married under a false name and I never knew her name. I supposed I was a little drunk at the time." For seven years thereafter the woman lived with BOYTE and was supported by him, still going under the name of WILSON, for she had another husband living, from whom she had never obtained a divorce. BOYTE says he never would have betrayed her secret but for the fact that she lately wrote him what he calls a "scandalous letter," in which she told him that she had all along loved another man, at the same time abusing him soundly for bringing her before the public. The letter preceding this one, had by means of which Mrs. WILSON obtained an assignment of furniture and other property owned by BOYTE, was of a different character, after using many terms of endearment, referring to past associations, &c., she wrote: "I am so unhappy, and can never be happy again. I will try and be good, and meet you in heaven."

Stokes' Release—He is Not Indicted Yet—An Attempt to Secure His Conviction.

EDWARD S. STOKES is still apparently unconcerned, and no relief which reaches him seems to affect his spirits. His counsel are getting up their line of defense. It is said that they will prove that STOKES had to shoot FISK in self-defense. The case of BOGEMAN B. EATON will be compelled, and STOKES' friends are already talking about it. Another rumor is, that distinguished surgeons are prepared to say that FISK's death was caused, not by STOKES' bullet, but by his medical attendants probing among his intestines for the bullet. The counsel for the prosecution are also at work. Several of the Erie Directory and a host of lawyers are now in Albany for the purpose of drafting a bill to alter the law—that part relating to challenging—in regard to choosing jurors in criminal cases. It is also understood that an attempt will be made to repeal the law which allows the accused to testify in his own behalf. The report that the prisoner has been indicted by the Grand Jury is not correct.

Commissioners of Emigration.

The Commissioners of Emigration have transmitted to Dr. ROSSING, Consul-General of the German Empire, the depositions of SOPHIA FROMM, aged six years, and ANNA FROMM, her sister, from which it appears that the little girl was cruelly treated by the mate of the steam-ship Hansa on the voyage from Bremen to this port in December last. Measures will be taken at once to bring him to justice.

AN OLD DOCTOR ON HIS TRAVELS.

Paris in 1820—Art Connoisseurs of the Time—King Charles's Falls.

Whether old Dr. MARTIN LUTHER, of London, cares that about one, anything in a course of criticism Dr HOLMES happy thought "that good Americans, when they die, go to Paris," (the place holding good as to all nationalities,) certain it is that this worthy Hanoverian doctor visited Paris, at the close of the seventeenth century, for the benefit of his health—for French air, as he expressed it—and a very pleasant time he took. Had he left us, explaining all the delights of that memorable city at that early period. The space occupied a volume of my Lord FORTLAND's suite, or which Libel. LIBEL has given such interesting details. The French Duke says that, for magnificence of table furniture, for beauty, livery, equipage, clothes and silver, nothing could equal it; and the doctor may have had the chub-cheeked Master of ceremonies between perhaps even the famed King Charles steps, in the great Hanover.

The first thing which strikes our traveler is one, probably derived from certain steady Anglo-Saxon ideas, which grapped our newly divinity came has raised before, for comparing London with Paris, he says: "Here (in Paris) the palaces and convents have cost us the people's livelihood, and crowded them excessively together, and possessed themselves of the greatest part of the ground, whereas in London the contrary may be observed, that the people have destroyed the palaces and placed themselves upon the foundations of them, and forced the nobility to live in squares or streets, in a sort of community; but this they have done honestly, having fairly purchased them." Expatiating on the interior magnificence of the houses, he speaks of "the hangings of rich tapestry raised with gold and silver threads, crimson damask and velvet beds, or of gold and silver tissue," but contents himself, after all, by remarking that this may be very fine, "but that many conveniences and utensils of life are wanting here," and that a certain Monsieur, having taken the trouble to catalogue those wants, had put them down as near threescore. He gives full credit on the excellence of the French coaches, and declares them infinitely superior to the English ones, and to show the difference writes: "This I never was so sensible of, as after having practised the Paris coaches for four months, I once did in the ancient chariots of my lord's, which came from England; but not a jolt but what affected a man, so as to be tired more in one hour to that, than in six in those." He is delighted that the sellers of pamphlets and hawkers are not allowed to cry their wares aloud through the streets, and thinks it a clever idea, that instead of bawling for lost things about the streets, advertisements are posted on the walls, offering from one to fifty louis for the restoration of lost property. He says, too, that it is both difficult and dangerous to sell a libel through the streets, but mention as a good joke a trick played on the Archbishop by the Jesuits, the latter having paid a blind beggar to sell for a penny, an awful libel on his reverence, who was not only a Duke but a Peer of France. How they lighted the streets is explained, with lanterns hanging from side to side of the houses, with candles four to the pound. As in later days, youth derived enjoyment from wrenching off knockers and spoiling the public lamplaries, so at this period young roysterers took out their fun in this precise way. The penalty was the galleys, and the doctor tells how three young gentlemen of good families, who were in prison for having "smashed the lamps in a frolick," were condemned to this ignominious punishment. One paid quite a penalty for a lark in those days.

The Dutch Dr. MARTIN LUTHER doctor a very fair amount of astute discernment. He objects to a "statue of the King" with a "vast winged woman close behind his back, holding forth a laurel crown over the King's head, and says she is so big "that she is a kind of embarrass, and, instead of giving victory, seems to be rather a hindrance to the King." He says, and tacitly, that Victory should be made no larger than a puppet, to be put aside if the conqueror wanted to, but that "this woman is enough to give a man a surfeit." It seems they must have had a queer variety of modesty even in the seventeenth century, for at that time, for the Doctor finds fault with the bad taste which prevails in the Palais Mazarin, where nude antiques had been clothed in vestments of plaster. Master Luther is learned in his antiquities, and gives a whole chapter on the legs and feaders, which he insist were made of white wool or flannel, and varnished, so that "you would take it to be a rag of linnen about them." He insists that from the scanty character of the Roman dress it would have been impossible for the early Italian races to have withstood the climate, save for anointing their skins with oils, or because they were a dirty people. He pitches into the dirty and degenerate people of his own time were by the use of "tobacco, strong waters, steel remedies, drinking mineral waters, bathing, tea, coffee, chocolate, &c."

Here is another bit of art criticism which is quite interesting. The doctor sees the "History of Marie de Medicis," painted by RUBENS, and he speaks forth: "Though this was done some years ago, it is as fresh as at the first, so great a master he was in coloring. His flesh is admirable, and his scarlet, for which, if he had not a secret not now understood, he had less avarice and more honor than most of our modern painters. "In certain the prudence of Jesuits was one of the great cares and studies of the late famous painters, and to paint, too, all their own designs, and, more particularly, the present dresses." The Doctor states that VANDYKE "did introduce this novelty too much in England, of painting people in the costume of the period," but believes it is the candid judgment of the connoisseurs of the time about it, in this way: "I appeal whether it is not better and much more pleasing to see the old fashion of a dead friend, or relation, or of a man of distinction, painted as he was, than in a foreign, ugly, and odd gaudiness, which never belonged to the person painted." The doctor visits numerous cabinets of collectors, and expatiates over what to him is a miracle, a zebra's skin, and writes carefully about the stripes and the color. A very interesting chapter is that on the food of Paris, and he states that the Parisians exist chiefly on bread and herbs. He commends most highly the gray salt of France, and with some queer sentiment of "that the Author of Nature has made salt is only good and fit for human use, when bedewed by the heat of the sun—that is, by solar evaporation. He tells us they have no round turnips in France, and those which did grow were no bigger than a knife-haft, and that potatoes, they were considered never to be seen in the market, though they had stores of Jerusalem Artichokes. The Doctor devotes several pages to mushrooms, probably almost unused at that period in England, and carefully describes the process of propagation. Our physician stands out very strongly for English beef, and poultry and game, and concludes by saying: "I don't remember I eat of above two sorts of fish, but what we have, as good or better in England, and that was wild pigs and red-legg'd partridge." Of fruit, the Doctor has not much to say, only citrus the Pisme d'Apple, which he cites "and hangs very beautiful, very red on one side, and pale or white on the other, and may serve the ladies as their toilettes for a pattern to paint by." But what would all this trip to a man on a holiday be without seeing the theatres? The opera is visited. "L'Europe Galante" is the piece. "It is extremely fine, and the music and dancing admirable, the stage large and magnificent, and well filled with actors; the dancing exquisite, as being performed by the best masters of that profession in town. The clothing rich, proper, and with great variety." A curious fact is here mentioned, "the actors are paid by the King, that the noblesse from various parts of the kingdom sang with the actors, and our author qualifiedly says, "That the spectators may be said to be here as much actors as those employed upon the very stage." But it is the comedies of MOLIERE which delight the English traveler, though he seems to hold that anything but well-will could funny caricatures of the quack doctors of that day.

Dr. LUTHER has somewhat of a roving commission among the great doctors of Paris, and gives long pages of disputes between them and himself on learned subjects. He mentions with interest the use of a celebrated drug called "hypocoeuanna," used for dysentery—its wonderful in its curative effects as "the Jesuits' powder for ague." He measures its being worth fifty crowns a pound. The Doctor does not hold his fellow-French practitioners in high esteem, and hints that they are stinging out of fellows, who take any scurvy fee. A distinguished hour, however, awaits him. The France of CONTI, at midnight, sends a coach for him. (It is on the 14th of April,) with instructions to bring some of the best of the Chemical drops, for the use of the son of the house of Condé. Here our Doctor stands on his ethics. He refuses to go unless to consult with other physicians of the household. He seems offended that more stress should have been placed on the famous drops than on his own skill, and complains of what little chemical toys, the Bejins of Quacks, are so mentally in vogue. It is strange, however, with all the good sense of our Dutch, to observe the reluctance to pute himself, in the far-famed King Charles drops, which are so ardently desired by such persons of quality as the Princess D'Enghien and the Duchess of Rotillon. And what does the Doctor think of today? The great material out of which these all-saving drops were made? Way, of raw silk, which must be burnt, and the product of the distillation used only. About an ounce and pound of the distillation from any other animal substance

[illegible]

GERMANY AND RUSSIA.

The Czar and His Courtiers Abroad—Russian Plans—A Hollow Friendship—Russia's Status—The Alliance in the Past—The Future—Results.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BERLIN, Wednesday, Dec. 29, 1871.

The incidents of the military festival of St. George, recently enacted at St. Petersburg, will supply matter for political discussion and speculation for some time to come. It was not only the characteristic speech of Emperor ALEXANDER—transpirated to you long since by telegraph—but the whole month of events preceding and succeeding that entertaining point, which gave a peculiar stamp on the proceedings.

THE CZAR'S CAUSE.

Of the Czar's cause there can be no doubt whatever. His manifestation of friendship for Emperor WILLIAM and Germany was not intended as an ordinary mark of courtesy, but as a striking declaration to the world that the Two Courts of St Petersburg and Berlin are, in spite of all contradictory rumors, to be still associated as practically one. The demonstration was acting up with all the care and preparation, at home and abroad, that could be bestowed on it; its demonstrative character being the feature it was chiefly prized for. There is no conceivable reason for the festival at all. The order kept its ceremony only two years since—in 1869—with almost as great celebration as this year. The Czar then likewise made the fête an occasion for proclaiming his unshaken friendship for his ally, whom he treated as the "friend of Kissingerdia." Generating him at the same time with the first class of the order of which he remains still the sole living representative. After so tried an interval, a new festival of this character seems quite uncalled for, except it be for some special reason. Again, the occasion is marked by such open Police interference and such overdone attention on the part of the Emperor to all his guests, down to the very corporal, that a distinct proof of his intention could not have been devised. The violent Anti-German tenor of the Russian Press has subsided suddenly, as if by magic, into the most blandiloquent flattery, at some cost, it is true, of administrative incoherence, such, for instance, as the prohibition of the sale of separate numbers of the Golos, a punishment incurred by not complying immediately with the Imperial orders. A forcible pressure has likewise been brought to bear upon the Slave circles at Court, making even their avowed head, the Grand Duke, successor, whose Anti-Germanism usually betrays itself in very demonstrative marks, as bland and civil to the guests as if his breast harbored no other wish than to serve them.

A HOLLOW FRIENDSHIP.

It would be rash to infer from this outward show of friendship that all is smooth and fair within. The Emperor's sincerity indeed, no one will doubt, nor hesitate to accept his conduct as it was intended to be accepted, as a pledge of his alliance with Germany throughout his lifetime, and, if possible, binding his country still beyond that period. But with the other parties the change is too sudden not to awaken suspicion. The hereditary Grand Duke's Anti-German leanings have been noted for years long before the Franco-German war created a new cause for jealousy, and the Press has been until lately marked by a peculiarly violent spirit of invective. In a free country the change of conduct might have denoted a change of conviction, but in the land of personal government it goes for very little in the opinion of the public, and to do their discernment justice, even the Germans receive it for no more than it is worth. German witnesses report the absence of all popular enthusiasm at the proceedings, though the splendor displayed attracted countless spectators. The new-comers were gazed at, the accoutrements of the sub-officers were felt and handled as a strange animal would be, but rains cheers were raised only by a few Germans present, and at Moscow a plainly Anti-German demonstration took place. In a piece performed by the opera bouffe, the Germans say, "The Watch on the Rhine" was turned into ridicule with more matter than good taste, to the infinite amusement of the Russian auditory. Some Germans, indignant at the affront, and feeling themselves unusually strong under the marked tokens of Imperial favors, began to rise, producing thereby no uproar, in consequence of which they were forcibly ejected by the Russian Police, into whose bosoms the friendly sentiments of their Imperial master do not seem to have penetrated. More proofs might be adduced that the new pro-Germanism is not really popular. The Czar stood quite alone in his desire to leave the Baltic University at Dorpat, a German town, while all his Cabinet recommended its removal to a Russian city for purposes of Russianization. Nay, Prince BARYATINSKY is reported to have remonstrated the Czar on the advisability of reconciling the Poles by concessions as the best preparation for a possible war with Germany.

THE IMPERIAL SPEECH.

It was probably just with a view to this latent and only recently patent Anti-Germanism that Emperor ALEXANDER uttered his memorable speech, which the St. Petersburg Exchange Gazette pronounces an official programme for the Russian policy of the future. Rest in despotic Russia the power of the "sole ruler of all the Russias" extends but to the last moment of his life, and discovering danger in the future the Czar, like a wise father, endeavors to tie up the affairs of his State so as to make their mismanagement as difficult as possible to his heir. But beyond this and above all were the words directed to France, which had deluded itself into the belief that Russia was about to make common cause with it. In this respect the Imperial speech constitutes a sad damper on French hopes and has been felt as such not only in France itself—as the altered language of the Press testifies—but also in St. Petersburg. My intelligence, coming from purely German sources, may be partial, but can hardly be altogether incorrect. M. DE GABRIAC is said to have felt the blow severely. He has not been seen out of the Embassy, declining the Imperial invitations—given as a formal civility—to the various festivals; his son, who, as an officer, ought by duty to have figured at the banquet, reported himself ill, and he uniform has been allowed among the Ambassadorial staff during the entire period of the German visit.

RUSSIA'S POWER.

The warship in which Russia is traditionally and even now held by rivals was have far outstripped it, as owing to a great measure to the dread of the unknown. The Empire is a world in itself, in the interior of which reforms and improvements, of which the brief notices transmitted to the outer world reflect but a faint image, though, in truth, they probably owe the storm which they engender to nothing else but their coming from so isolated a region. Moreover, it may be thought that a country so vast and immeasurable must have a power in some degree commensurate with its size; and, lastly, much of the wonder comes in mere habit. Especially in Germany, Russia has for a long time been herself as a sort of protectress—strong enough by reason of German division, and directing a kind of humage which stalked the Czar the title—invited politically against the lords of the land—of German "Oberkaiser," ("kaiser" is the Germanic for "lord.")

THE ALLIANCE IN THE PAST.

The alliance hitherto existing between Russia and Prussia, and renewed by the compliments exchanged by the two Emperors, is a phenomenon in History without a parallel. It needed but the order for the Russian and Prussian armies to defile in mixed couples, nor the printed mention of the Prussian soldiers by the Czar as "his comrades, with whom he expected not to have taken part in the war," nay his retinue to the Prussian Court of the Kaiser, to show that the two military continents have really been twaynes up in attachment of our military family. The feeling does not extend beyond Prussia, nor does it exist in any but the military class, and is the only to the purely and unfashionably military; but as far as it would it is intense. Among it stands Saxony of Germania to not between nations has become manner, but the effect motive is a kind of old-fashioned chivalry. I would call it, inasmuch as it places the person above the country—a traditional attachment between the rulers, who have hitherto recalled themselves as autocrats. Analogous to more in Russia than in France, and it was mainly the support against the progressive democratic influences of the age that the FREDERICK WILLIAMS stood for the lives of RICHARD and ALEXANDER. You will find no admirer of Russia in Germany except in the strictly Junkerist classes, who would wish to turn the hands of time back by a century or two, and who revere in the despotic of the Rock the lovely ideal of personal rule. Between the two lights the feeling is extremely strong. Many have had nothing to amassed over and danger to have nothing. If Germans were arrested and maltreated in Russia—as has often been the case—the absence of Redtie was constant to give new it; whatever might happen it was an understood thing that the two rulers should stand together in order so best to serve their respective interests.

THE FUTURE.

Owing to this very characteristic of personality and class interest, the alliance is spoiled, sooner or later, to be broken up. In Germany, popular feeling has become a power already, and will be the stronger still ten or fifteen years hence, not only by reason of its natural growth, but because at that time the likelihood is that other rulers, with less claim on its patience, will be in the helm. Emperor WILLIAM, who has gathered up and merged into his person all the individual prejudices of his race, has, on the other hand, raised Germany to greatness, and the nation would endure far worse tolerance on that account during his lifetime, that it would not stand a shoulder. Happily it has little chance of a sudden decay of the old school, for Prince "FRITZ" is known to be far more favorable to liberal principles than his father, and far less in love with his "divine right." As for the Chancellor, nobody believes in a second BISMARCK. Like his master, and more than his master, he may personally claim patience and submission by his merits for the national cause, but his accessory wings will be clipped materially. In Russia, popular opinion has not yet risen to the same height of power as in Germany, but its expression comes practically with the same force, because it happens to be the opinion of the ruling class, viz.: the high Russian aristocracy, second in influence only to the Emperor himself.

RESULTS.

From this it will appear that that close friendship proclaimed by the Czar threatens to be only a short-lived affair; and that it is really the opinion of the bulk of the German nation. In the words of the Augsburg Gazette, "the alliance depends upon one pair of eyes." The official papers are, indeed, profuse in their favorable comments on the speech, and some Austro-German papers, such as the Presse and New Free Press—addressing themselves more to the hostile Czechs than the Germans—support the chorus with the same arguments; but through out the liberal Press of Germany a feeling is apparent of more than doubt in the stability of what they desire, more on the ground of its expediency than on principle. The immediate result of a coldness or rupture would not necessarily be war, though the authorities on both sides are evidently not blind to the danger. It seems an odd epilogue to the drama at St. Petersburg that the two great strategists of the favored party of success, Prince FREDERICK CHARLES and MOLTKE, are about to stop half-way on their return journey to lay down plans for new fortifications in the East. That system of fortifications has only been newly broached, but breached with the distinct idea of serving in case of war with Russia. When friends come to consider precautions to be taken in case of a rupture, that rupture seems of itself to be brought one step nearer, and there are plenty of events looming up in the horizon, which may, in time, lead to the unwished-for event. The Boston Budget, in its recent inspired article, has drawn the dangers home too strongly, which the interposition of a powerful Germany opposes to Russia, by not only hemming it in in the Baltic, but barring its way altogether to the west, the chief direction of commerce, and moreover, the rivalry between the Slavonic and Teuton races at this moment convulsing Austria threatens in time to bring on, as a natural consequence, a contest the fierceness of which must far exceed that shown in the late war. To sum up, the Festival of St. George has recorded to the world the sincere and firm determination of the present Czar to continue his traditional friendship with Prussia in the old spirit, and to provide as far as is possible for its continuance after his death. So far it has had the effect desired by its originator. Above all, it has stopped for good all rumors disquieting the continent, of Russian jealousy against Germany, or of a Franco-Russian alliance. Beyond this it has failed in its effect, for both in Russia and in Germany it is just by its demonstrated character and the force exerted on Russian opinion, that it has aroused the dread of that which shall come after that "one pair of eyes" is closed. By calling attention to the relation between Russia and Germany, it has served to bring out in stronger relief the impending dangers; and, however great may be the effect of the interchange of civilities on the two chief actors, it cannot be said to have cemented the friendship between the two nations.

SHOCKING CRUELTY BY PARENTS

Sensation in Windsor, N. Y.—An Infant Terribly Beaten—Extraordinary Narrative of Supposition.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WINDSOR, Broome County, N. Y., Thursday, Jan. 11, 1872.

The three hundred and odd inhabitants of this village, although used to sensations, are now enjoying one so out of the usual line that they are in a ferment of excitement and indignation. As it is the sequel of another extraordinary episode in the history of the place, antedating the present one some years, a narrative of the facts in both may not be out of place.

Windsor is the centre of a fanatical "religious" society known as the Nazarites, the members of which believe in all sorts of superstition, among them the exorcising of evil spirits. In the Fall of 1867 a young woman named ALICE KENT, the daughter of URIAH KENT, a respectable citizen of the town, became an attendant upon the meetings of the Nazarites. Her parents remonstrated with her to no purpose, and finally commanded her to discontinue her visits. Miss KENT soon after disappeared from her home, and simultaneous with her departure was that of one HOSKERTHA BLAYGUN. The fathers of the girl, believing that certain of the Nazarites knew of the whereabouts of his daughter, at once sought the aid of the law to compel them to disclose it. MERRITT GROW and his wife CELESTIA, GEORGE DAVENPORT, MRS. BLAYGUN, the mother of the missing man, and LOUIS BROWN, were brought before Justice GURNEY, but refused to answer any questions regarding the disappearance of the girl or man. They were all committed to jail for contempt of Court, and also became liable for prosecution for abduction, unless they produced the girl. Mr. KENT declaring his fortune to carry the matter to the bitter end, the girl was brought back as suddenly as she had disappeared—the Nazarites said from Philadelphia. Although no evidence of the fact was known, yet it was generally believed that BLAYGUN had enticed her away at the instigation of the society. Matters then took a most unexpected turn. ELI GROW, aged eighteen, a son of MERRITT and CELESTIA, was brought forward and married to Miss KENT, the ceremony being performed by Justice DURKEE, in Binghamton. This in some way put a stop to all legal measures, and the two young became quiet. Mr. and Mrs. GROW have lived together ever since, good Nazarites, and are now candes of a new sensation, already referred to. A day or two since, URIAH KENT, the father of young Mrs. GROW, received the news of his daughter and her husband, and had them arrested on the Justices BURNINGHAM, on a charge of most cruelly and shamefully beating and maltreating their child, only eighteen months old. The beating of the child was reported to Mr. KENT by Hastings, and he went at once to the house of his daughter. He found the poor child in a terrible state. Its face was black and blue from the effects of the blows. Hose and there spots of bloody tissue, where long fractures from which the blood was coming. The cause of this shocking treatment was, the father of the child said that the child refused to call him its name. Mrs. BLAYGUNLAS, who is considered an oracle among the Nazarites, at once pronounced that the child was possessor of an evil spirit, and, the father and mother, according to the Mosaic law, should stone the latter to death. The child was then placed upon a high stool, without support, and the father, mother, and Mrs. BLAYGUN, for some three hours when its exhaustion made its appearance necessary, so that the child was taken from the stool, only the Mrs. BLAYGUN and mother have been held to answer at the next Court of Sessions, in the bail each. The affair has created an intense feeling in the community, and it will probably be some pretty warm quarters for the pure Nazarites.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

Twelve hundred and fifty-seven persons were arrested by the Police last week.

Dr. WILLARD PARKER delivered a lecture last night at the Cooper Union on "Our Bodies and Their Use."

Admiral J. R. TUCKER, of the Peruvian Navy, and Col. T. A. JACKSON, of Virginia, are at the New-York Hotel.

Gen. J. E. MULFORD, of Richmond, and Hon. THOMAS GESSENHAUN, of Montpelier, are at the Grand Central Hotel.

During the week there were twenty-eight fires in the City, with an estimated loss of $6,150 and an insurance of $[illegible].

The French Consul was given a dinner at Delmonico's, last evening, by a number of French residents, merchants and others.

The Court of General Sessions was closed yesterday, having adjourned till Tuesday. Neither of the two Grand Juries were in session.

The vital statistics for the past week show 32 still births, 202 births, 141 marriages and 474 deaths, which is 20 less than the mortality of the previous week.

The annual meeting of the Century Club for the selection of officers took place last night. WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT was re-elected President of the Club.

The case of JOSEPH WOOLF and PETER ARGUS, charged with using counterfeit gold coin, was before Commissioner SHIPMA